Pa. Poultry Banquet hosts 1670 supporters

BY CURT HARLER

LANCASTER — A total of 2 paying guests attended the 1980 Pennsylvania Poultry Federation Banquet Thursday night to support the state broiler, egg, and turkey industry.

Total attendance at the banquet, including guests, was 1670, according to PPF Executive Director John Hoffman.

Despite the dismal economic situation in the poultry industry, 99 full tables were sold to supporters for the Banquet.

The annual fund raising event is the best attended affair of its kind in the East.

Main course at the dinner was Federation Turkey Benedict with Hollandaise sauce and crab meat. The Average prices drop at Pa. Holstein Sale

BY DICK ANGLESTEIN

HARRISBURG — While nearly a half-million dollars in young dairy animals went across the auction block at the 27th Annual Pennsylvania Association Show and Sale this week, average prices were down considerably from those paid last year.

In total, 316 calves and bred heifers were sold on Wednesday and Thursday in the small arena of the Farm Show Building at a combined price tag of $497,575.

Last year's receipts totaled $616,675, or $119,100 more than this year. The number of animals sold last year was 323, just seven more than this year.

The average price paid for a calf at Wednesday's sale was $1,416. This is $376 below the average price of $1,792 paid in 1979.

The bred heifer average price at Thursday's sale amounted to $1,942, which was $177 below last year's average of $2,119.

The top individual price at both sales was $7,100 for a year-old calf, "Lucinda Sunny Craft Chief," consigned by Earl C. Stauffer and Associates, Ephrata. It was bought by the Lucinda Syndicate, Selma, Calif.

FDA, USDA crack down on DES

Cattle prices come out of slump

LANCASTER — DES, diethylstilbestrol, the controversial growth stimulant not only improves cattle weight gains—it also improves cattle prices.

On April 4, the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture Carol Tucker Foreman and the Commissioner of Food and Drugs Jere Goyan joined together in making a statement to deal with what the government has ruled as the illegal distribution and use of DES implants in cattle.

They announced that at least 70,000 cattle, and perhaps as many as 200,000 head have been illegally implanted with DES in the United States. The drug was banned by the Food and Drug Administration on June 29, 1979 because of the possibilities of its causing cancer.

The ban prohibited the use of DES in animal feed as well as the implanting of DES pellets in animals. Implanting, typically in the animal's ear, permitted the drug to be released gradually into the animal's system.

The manufacture and shipment of DES became illegal on July 13, 1979, and it was banned for use on cattle and sheep on November 1, 1979.

According to Dick Reed, of Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc., a brokerage firm in Lancaster, the announcement of the government barring these implanted cattle from the market has had a positive effect on the cattle prices since last Thursday.

In the past week, the cattle prices have recovered four cents because of the scare-reaction effect on the daily cattle business, he said.

"The news triggered the market, and the maximum 1.5 cents a pound increase limit was reached on several days," he said. "It was time for the market to turn. June cattle prices had reached their lowest at 60.25 cents—they're high had been 77 cents. Now the market has recovered four of the seventeen cents it lost in a short period of time."

The market had been going steadily downward

Farm estate planning — what's there to know?

BY SHEILA MILLER

LITITZ — Everyone has heard the old saying, "There are only two things in life you can be sure of—taxes and dying". No one can exit from this world without facing both, thanks to the government's estate settlement taxes.

The trauma that death brings to the surviving family, whether on the farm or in the city, is a time of grief and suffering. And, unfortunately, this dark period in the lives of many farm families, is clouded over with an even darker realization that they weren't prepared for the death of their loved one.

Every day there are farms lost to families because of the rigid federal and state tax laws which govern estates. Even farmers who think they have their tracks covered by making out a will may unknowingly leave their families with a heavy taxation burden.

Consider the case of a couple we'll call Mr. and Mrs. Farmer Brown, who lived in Pennsylvania. Their plans to look after the well-being of their children and grandchildren almost ended in the loss of two of their three farms.

Like many Pennsylvania farmers, the Browns had their attorney draft a will for them. The will left the entire farm to the surviving spouse upon the death of either Mr. or Mrs. Brown.

In 1968, Mr. Brown passed away. Mrs. Brown survived her husband for five years, and died in 1973.

At the time of her death, the original will called for the three farms to go to the Brown's two sons. The will spelled out the sons had the lifetime right to use the farms, and after their death, the farms would go to any natural children from their marriages.

The Brown's will further added the farms could never be encumbered—that is, have any debt against them.

Now, the provisions of the will probably seemed quite satisfactory to the Browns and they undoubtedly did not realize what sort of problems it would be creating. But after the deaths of the parents, the troubles became apparent.

The first problem came when the same estate was caught by the estate settlement tax bite for the second time in one generation. In fact, estate taxes were assessed twice in five years, once with the death of each of the parents Brown.

Their wish that the farms should never be encumbered didn't give their sons any opportunity to build their own estates, to look after their wives after their demise. Their equity was only what they could build up in cattle and equipment.

The sons could never borrow against the farms in order to expand their operation, because the will stated they could not use the real estate as security for borrowing money.

And, regarding the inheritance of the grandchildren, the one couple never was able to have any natural children.

The estate settlement taxes on the three farms created a financial burden on the heirs to the point where they were going to have to sell two of the three farms to pay those taxes. This would have set back their farming operation to the point of slow or no return.

Through some legal advice, they were told that the farms could be taxed for estate purposes based on the land value for agriculture. This allowed for a somewhat happier ending—only one of the farms had to be sold to meet their tax obligations.

This true story, and many others like it, are the basis for a series of articles in the next several weeks of Lancaster Farming dealing with estate planning, wills, trusts, partnerships, and corporations.

The informational series is designed to point out estate problem areas by learning from past examples, putting estate planning into present-day situations, and projecting the impact of the future on farm estates.

Winning dairy honors . . . the Pennfield way.

Nearly 100 area dairymen — all Pennfield customers — were honored recently for achieving high herd production, high increases and high record cows last year Of vital importance to their success is the way they continue to balance their home grown forage with nutrients that boost milk yields dramatically and enhance butterfat test results. This, of course, is exactly what the Pennfield Computerized Total Ration Service can achieve for you And here's how it works: 1. We collect samples of your forage. 2. Then we evaluate the quality of your forages We determine the total digestible nutrients. The fiber content. The protein content. The amount of carbohydrates. 3. The computer quickly spots any nutrients lacking in the forage. For your milking cows And for your dry cows. It immediately points out the overfeeding of nutrients. Underfeeding, too. Both, of course, may be different at different times of the year. And the printout will tell you what you need. And when. 4. Your Penn Pro Professional advises you on the quantity and type of nutrients that should be added, to balance your total feeding program to your cows' nutritional requirements

There Are Many Ways To Save Time With The Green Machine®

The Green Machine power blower with liquid-tank attachment is ideal for spray vaccine application — vaccine is applied in about the time it takes to walk through the flock.

It's just one way poultrymen are saving time and making money with this great new tool. Here's 12 more:

BLOWING:

1. Removing accumulated dust and cobwebs from buildings before housing new laying flocks.

2. Fast removal of old feed from feeders

3. Periodic cleaning of fans and motors while in use — cleaner surfaces give a lower heat rise, prolonging motor life.

4. Cleaning egg trays and walkways of dust during the lay or growing period of pullets.

5. Cleaning screens over air intakes both before housing a new laying flock and during lay periods, allowing unrestricted flow of fresh air into the building.

6. Removing accumulated dust and depris in feed rooms and mills.

DUSTING:

7. Using The Green Machine dusting attachment with static-electricity feature, such materials as Sevin® 50% W.P. can be applied to the poultry and building surfaces to control the Northern Fowl Mite and other pests.

8. Garden vegetables and ornamental shrubs can be dusted easily and thoroughly

MISTING:

9. In addition to applying vaccine, as described above, cages and buildings can be disinfected before housing a new flock.

10. Housefly and mosquito control insecticides can be quickly and easily applied.

11. Aphids and other pests can be controlled in shrubs and trees.

12. Grain storage facilities can be misted to control insects and larvae.

Now, see what The Green Machine can do to save you time and money.

Lancaster Farming says...

How to travel first class

There's an old saying that when the going gets tough, the tough get going.

The example set this week in Lancaster by the Pennsylvania Poultry Federation members ranks right up there with the best of stories of struggling onward against the odds.

It's the kind of story that should make other segments of agriculture, enjoying better financial success, blush with shame.

The poultry people, faced with overexpansion in the broiler business, poor egg prices, and a turkey market which has its feathers trimmed, came out Thursday night over 1600 strong.

They paid $75 each for the privilege of eating dinner with some like-minded supporters of the state poultry business

An amazing 99 whole tables were sold—a table consists of 12 dinners, and there was no discount from the $900 bill.

Now, it may not seem the best of short-term economics to spend $150 to take your wife to dinner when you've got a house full of birds and it's going to cost you a few cents each for the fun of feeding them But long term, it is good business sense

Poultry people paid the freight gladly, knowing they would be the ones to reap the reward in the end. Banquet receipts provide the lion's share of PPF's operating revenue for the year.

Generally it's when things are toughest that one needs to draw on the reservoir of promotion, research, and unity that was filled during the flush periods.

The poultry industry has done just that. Banquet attendance has risen by about 200 persons for the third straight year. A similar jump next year could mean the banquet will outgrow the two giant rooms filled at the Host this year.

As one Federation member joked, PPF may be forced to move the banquet to Farm Show and serve box lunches.

It's doubtful that would make a difference . . the name of the game is mutual assistance, not food.

Even under those circumstances the poultry people likely would set an example that other commodity groups would do well to emulate.

It's the real thing

At the 10th annual meeting of the United Dairy Industry Association in New Orleans, the Real Seal got a boost from the nation's dairy industry.

UDIA and its member organizations are planning an immediate nationwide campaign to sign up processors and handlers to display the Real Seal symbol on all packages containing natural dairy products

The Real Seal is a picture of a drop of milk containing the word Real It will help shoppers tell the difference between authentic dairy foods and fakes

That's not always easy Ice cream usually is a dairy product—is ice milk? Is pasteurized cheese food? How about stuff which contains real milk? What's un-real milk, anyway?

The Real Seal symbol was started by the California Milk Advisory Board back in 1976. California always seems a bit ahead of the country with innovative ideas, including this one But it's not too late for local dairymen to benefit from a good thing

A number of local dairies probably will join the campaign with little or no hesitation at all Some others may be slower

This isn't being set out for the general gratification of the Pennsylvania dairy farmer He has some action to take, too

He can contact fieldmen, district directors, or other representatives of the dairy buying his milk. Let them know farmers in this area think its about time they stopped losing sales to ersatz products.

The government has shown little inclination to require truth in labeling for dairy products But the industry really doesn't need government help to whip this one.

The Real Seal campaign can assure each consumer the weekly food budget is being spent on the real thing Its cost to the farmer and industry will be minimal.

After all, if the consumer is paying for the best, the consumer deserves the best the real thing.

FREEDOM OR PRETEXT?

Lesson for April 13, 1980

Background Scripture:
1 Peter 1:3-9, 2; 4:1-3
Devotional Reading:
Galations 3:23-29

The other day on television, a talk-show host was interviewing a woman whose ex-husband had successfully sued her for her custody of their two children. It was an unusual legal case, because, in most courts, custody of children in a marriage broken by divorce is usually awarded to the mother. However, the ex-husband maintained that the children should be taken from the woman because she was living with another man and therefore not providing a "wholesome" home environment. The judge agreed.

Living Free

On the talk-show the woman vowed to fight this decision to the Supreme Court The judge, she insisted, had no right to tell her how to live if she was not breaking any laws. "I am free to live as I please!" she proclaimed to the audience. Then a woman in the audience asked her if, in order to regain custody of her children, she would consent to marry the man with whom she was living The mother hesitated for a few moments before answering, "No, I do not have to submit to that kind of coersion.

This woman's attitude is reflective of a mood that has captured many people in our country today: "I am free to do as I please." This mood is not necessarily either good or bad. In many ways, the development of personal freedom has been long overdue. It was an emphasis, I believe, that needed to be made to free us from the pharasaic legalism that pervaded much of our standards.

Yet, at the same time, it has not taken very long for it to be evident that the pendulum has swung much, much too far. The emphasis upon personal freedom to the exclusion of virtually everything else is like a cancer running rampant in the body of our society. Freedom has become license and a justification for avoiding all responsibility, except to one's self.

Live As Servants

The writer of 1 Peter was aware of this: "Live as free men, yet without using your freedom for a pretext for evil" (1 Peter 2:16). When we live without any constraints, external or internal, we may be no more free than the legalist. We are no more free than a truck whose handbrake has been released while standing at the top of a hill. A runaway truck is not free; neither is a runaway human life. The cult of personal freedom is just another kind of bondage

Living free does not mean there are no restraints, but that we are the ones to determine what restrains we will place upon ourselves As the writer of the epistle says, "but live as servants of God" (2:16b) Servitude is only a loss of freedom when it is imposed upon us, but the true freedom of Jesus Christ consists of the servanthood we freely choose as followers of Christ.

TO CONSIDER OTHERS

This is the time of the year when relations become a bit strained between farmers and non-farm residents of the rural community This does not have to be this way if each person tries to understand the feelings and intentions of the other person When livestock and poultry waste is spread on the farm land, which is a very good practice, some folks think they are going to be permanently injured by the odors. When farmers understand the possible reaction from others in the community, they should attempt to spread this waste on fast-drying days and then try to get it incorporated into the topsoil just as soon as possible. On the other hand, non-farm people should understand this practice is a part of modern farming and a part of rural living. It may be unpleasant for a short time, but as far as I know, rural odors have never been proven to be a definite health hazard. Special efforts to understand the living and working practices of other parties, working both ways, is suggested.

TO PLANT TREES

Trees are a very important part of our landscape; this is true in the urban areas as well as in the rural areas This is the time of the year best suited to the planting of all kinds of trees Some are used for landscape purposes, some for shade, and some for windbreaks. Trees are important to our environment and add grace and beauty to many areas. Trees provide shelter for many kinds of birds and wildlife, as well as the ability to conserve soil and moisture. Folks desiring to plant trees should attempt to

Which feed for your horse?

You're concerned about health and condition, of course, but you should also take into consideration the kind of life your horse leads, and match feed to job.

Feed requirements for the athlete horse are different from those of the nursing mare different for the show horse different for the horse that's ridden only a few hours on weekends.

While high quality forage can meet the needs for maintenance, grains and supplements must be fed to supply energy needs for growth, condition, and work.

That's why Agway provides a full line of feeds to meet varying protein, vitamin and mineral needs. There are Agway feeds designed to be fed along with forages, as well as complete feeds to be fed alone.

Pleasure horses, show horses, race horses . . . working horses, non-working horses, mares and foals . Agway supplies each of them with the feed that's just right for their needs

Agway Horse Feeds are available throughout the Northeast

Thursday, April 10
Report supplied by USDA

Despite a severe downturn on Wednesday, midweek prices on slaughter steers ranged 1.00-2.00 higher as a result of sharp price advances . gained on meager early marketings. Heifers were 1.50-2.50 higher. Cows were 2.00-3.00 higher and bulls firm, instances 1.00 higher.

Four day receipts this week: 10,100; last week: 9,400; year ago: 12,100

The fed cattle trade followed an erratic course during the week. Early supplies were sharply reduced by stiff seller resistance to four weeks of declining prices and the emergence of some apparently bullish factors over the weekend. Early, upward spiraling live prices were at least partially supported by a similar trend on carcass beef. However, much of the early upturn was dissipated at midweek on an expanded supply as carcass trading again trended lower. Demand was further decreased by the absence of one major buying interest because of labor problems. The overall finish of the steer and heifer supply was rather attractive with a fairly liberal percentage choice steers and heifers included. Slaughter steers made up approximately 46 pct. and heifers 32 pct. Cows made up 14 pct. and feeders 4 pct.

STEIGER

THE KEYS TO COMPARING 4WD TRACTORS.

Drawbar horsepower The most basic criterion is how much can it pull as measured in horsepower at the drawbar This is more important than engine horsepower because the drawbar is the working end of the tractor

Cost per drawbar horsepower This is the real way to measure what you re getting for the money Just divide the cost by the tested drawbar horsepower and you ve got a figure you can use to compare all makes and types of tractors

Fuel consumption How much work can the machine squeeze out of a gallon of diesel fuel? While many people gauge fuel efficiency by gallons per hour this is not the the best measurement The best way amount of work per gallon or more scientifically horsepower hours/gallon

Drive train ratio Divide the drawbar horsepower by engine horsepower The result expressed as a percentage indicates how much power is actually available to do work at the drawbar

Weight to horsepower Generally speaking the higher the weight to horsepower ratio the more power the tractor will ultimately deliver You might ask why doesn t everyone build them real heavy? The answer the cost of steel But like in everything else you can find quality if you look for it

Noise All manufacturers have a decibel rating on their cabs One Steiger four wheel-drive has been proven to be as quiet as 75 5 decibels under full power and load That s about as quiet as a pick up truck A quiet tractor reduces operator fatigue improves productivity

Agricultural Area (LCPC)

Shaded areas of this map from the Farm Directory are those areas of Ephrata Township with prime farm land as defined by the Lancaster County Planning Commission's Comprehensive Plan. The proposed agricultural zone would cover similiar area. The Preserve Board has agreed to act in an advisory role to the Ephrata Township supervisors and planning commission.

County Ag Preserve Board takes first official action

BY CURT HARLER

LANCASTER — Election of officers and formulation of plans to help Ephrata Township with its proposed ag district particulars highlighted the first meeting of the Lancaster County Agricultural Preservation Board.

Elected Chairman at the Wednesday meeting was Amos H. Funk, RI Millersville vegetable farmer Funk is serving a four year term on the board

Vice Chairman will be Aaron Z. Stauffer, RI Ephrata Also a farmer, Stauffer is Chairman of the Lancaster County Conservation District Board of Directors He is serving a three year term on the Preserve Board

Secretary will be Charles Conrad, 1939 Millersville Pike, Lancaster. Also serving a three year term, Conrad is a registered archetict and member of the State Planning Board. He chaired the first Lancaster County Planning Commission

Funk told his fellow board members he hoped to see "a program, not a plan" to preserve agricultural land in the County.

Most immediate item on the agenda was discussion of plans being made by the Ephrata Township supervisors and planning board.

There will be a meeting April 24 in Ephrata Township.

The Lancaster County Ag Preservation Board agreed to participate in an advisory role with the Township and to review any proposal the Township may come up with.

The Board agreed to work with Gerald M. Heistand and the Ephrata Township solicitor in coming up with a proposal which most likely will be based on the Sample Ag District Zoning Ordinance Provisions and the Township planning commission.

Money for the program will come in part from the Resource Conservation Act funds in the amount of $18,600 appropriated for Lancaster County.

Heistand, who has been working on land use maps for all of the townships in the County, explained how planners come up with areas

Grange master asks action on institutional farms

HARRISBURG — Charles Wismer, Master of the Pennsylvania State Grange, called for "some kind of decision to be made" concerning the fate of the institutional farms of the Department of Welfare, in Harrisburg on Tuesday.

"The way the situation stands at present," Wismer said, "the workers will be furloughed at the end of April, and the dispersal sales will commence in mid May."

The decision to sell the equipment and livestock, and to furlough the farm employees, came as a result of the Governor ordering the Department of Welfare to cut their employment rolls by 1000 workers, earlier this year.

Legislation to transfer the responsibility of the institutional farm's management to the Department of Agriculture was pending in the House at the time.

Because of the tremendous amount of agricultural research being performed at many of the institutional farms, the Grange has been actively seeking to save them through either Executive Order of the Governor's Office, or legislative mandate.

Wismer cited the Young Sire Program as one of the more promising programs being performed at the farms.

An outstanding example of the success of this program is Harrisburg Gay Ideal, a bull bred by the Harrisburg State Hospital.

Siring over 18,000 daughters in almost 4000 herds, Gay Ideal's daughters' milk production averages 17,599 pounds of milk, and 628 pounds of butterfat at 3.6 percent.

Approximately 6500 of his daughters had an official classification score of 79.3.

Harry Roth, Operations Director of Atlantic Breeders Cooperative, said, "It would be very difficult to assess the economic value to the dairy industry made by the daughters and sons of this bull, which resulted from the Welfare Herds breeding program in Pennsylvania.

"Over the years," Roth continued, "the state's Welfare Herds have been on a production testing program and contributed very greatly to the Artificial Insemination Sire Sampling and Evaluation Programs."

Praise was tendered by William Nichol, of the Pennsylvania Holstein Association, who stated, "these herds are much more valuable to be kept in their present form than to be dispersed."

"The dairy industry is only one type of agriculture that can benefit from the research being carried on to the institutional farms" Wismer said. "Many other research programs including swine and crop production are in progress."

Much of the freeze branding research in the Commonwealth has been done on institutional farm facilities.

Freeze branding shows a great deal of promise in terms of branding cattle without causing hide damage.

Another series of testing being done is the fat back on pigs program. This research determines what genetic lines produce too much fat on pigs backs.

Litter size is yet another area of research that could be beneficial for the Pennsylvania pork industry.

"A great deal of research is being done on herbicides, pesticides, legumes, and vegetable weed control," the State Grange Master said.

Wismer emphasized that the institutional farms "are not in competition with farmers, but are a benefit to us."

However, if the herds are broken up, the equipment sold, and the laborers furloughed, the farms won't be of any help to anybody."

they feel are worth preserving.

First, he said, they identify developed areas. Then they take the Lancaster County Planning Commission's prime agricultural area map and designate the best farmlands.

They look mainly at land with Class I and Class II soils.

A final step is to include farm boundaries so the district does not exclude half of one farm. Unfortunately, the new soil survey was not used for this project. But Heistand said soil scientists he talked to felt there would be few major changes in the general soil classifications.

Heistand mentioned West Hempfield as one township with a logical land use plan with development separated from agriculture.

He questioned Upper Leacock's leaving about half the township's land available for development when almost all of its valuable soils now are being farmed and as much as 80 to 90 percent of the ground is owned by Amish farmers who show little inclination to develop their holdings.

John Ahlfeld, Lancaster County Planning Commission, noted there is no formal relationship between ag district plans and zoning.

But, he added, the more methods available to control loss of farmland, the better the odds of preserving the land.

The Ag Preservation Board agreed to meet every other Friday for the next several months until they get their programs under way.

The next meeting will be held on Friday, April 25 at 10 a.m. in the Conference Room of the Planning Commission. It is located on the sixth floor of the new courthouse building in Lancaster.

The meeting is open to the public.

Hearing judge upholds decision to deny Agrispon's label

BY CURT HARLER

HARRISBURG — A state hearing examiner has upheld the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture's decision not to grant a label for Agrispon soil additive.

The Department announced a final decision to deny registration to Agrispon under the Pennsylvania Fertilizer, Soil Conditioner, and Plant Growth Substance Law of 1977. Pennsylvania Agriculture Secretary Penrose Hallowell ordered Sn Corp, Inc. and J&J Agri-Products, the manufacturer and distributor of the product to stop sale of Agrispon within 30 days.

Jane Alexander, local distributor of Agrispon through J&J Agri-Products, Dallsburg, said the decision only shows the State of Pennsylvania is behind the times.

She said she expects Sn Corp., the Dallas-based manufacturer of Agrispon, to join J&J in appealing the decision through the Commonwealth Courts.

"In other cases where Sn Corp has appealed they have won," she said. She added that as long as the firm has an appeal pending in the court system, the State can not issue a stop sale order.

The Agriculture Secretary said his decision was based on a complete review of evidence and on the Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law recommended by Joseph Klein, a Harrisburg attorney.

Klein served as hearing examiner during four days of hearings held in November and December 1979.

Hallowell also denied a request for registration of Agrispon under an ammended application filed by Sn Corp and J&J on November 13, 1979.

Hallowell said the original application for registration included 26 product claims.

"Sn Corp and J&J failed to offer any proof on 24 separate claims in evidence presented with the application, during the hearing, or in independent testing of the product at Penn State," he said.

The hearing examiner concluded that the applicants failed to establish that Agrispon "increases the nitrogen in the soil, or even enhances the generation of nitrogen."

Hallowell's final order on the application gives Sn Corp and J&J 30 days notice in which to stop sale or to follow the decision by appeal to Commonwealth Court.

Alexander said the hearing process "is a beautiful way to defeat the little guy J&J alone never could afford the expense of the hearings," she said.

Sn Corp estimated the cost of the Harrisburg hearings at $30,000, including the expense of bringing in expert witnesses from around the country.

The ammended application, which Hallowell denied Thursday, was filed at the onset of the administrative hearing last fall.

This application made only two claims: that Agrispon inhancen the generation of Nitrogen; and that Agrispon is non-toxic.

Sn Corp, J&J, and the Agriculture Department had agreed that evidence and testimony received in the hearing would be applied toward consideration of the ammended application as well as the original application.

Hallowell said he had reviewed the recommendation of the hearing examiner and data submitted after the hearing was closed, and found no evidence to substantiate the claims.

Alexander said Sn Corp and J&J had submitted additional material to the hearing examiner. "Every additional piece of data we get makes our case more appealable," she said.

Several Penn State researchers and extension personnel have called Agrispon "snake oil" or "nothing more than water and some algae."

To date, 105 products have been registered as soil conditioners or plant growth substances. Orders have been issued to stop sale of 21 other products.

Eight products, including Agrispon, have been denied registration and received administrative hearings. After a final order of denial, four companies have been ordered to stop sales. Final decisions still are pending on four other applications.

Robert Herr is sheep judge

Penn State's Little I scheduled for April 26

UNIVERSITY PARK — The Penn State Block and Bridle Club will sponsors its 63rd Little International Livestock Exposition April 26 at the University Beef and Sheep Center.

Judging will begin at 8 a.m. as students compete for showmanship and fitting honors in beef cattle, sheep, swine, and horses. The top showman in each division will compete for the overall grand champion title.

Animals are exhibited by the students. They have a month to brush their fingers to the bone, scrub and clip until their animals are ready for the show.

Judges for this year's show are Glen Klippenstein of Maysville, Mo. for beef cattle; Mike States of Homer City for swine; Robert Herr of Narvon for sheep; and Nancy Kadwill of Ambler for horses.

William Fairbairn of West Chester is this year's show manager. He is a senior in animal production.

The assistant show manager is Jeffrey Byerly of Milton. Byerly is a junior in animal production.

This year's show is dedicated to Lester C. Griel of Penn State's Department of Veterinary Science. The honor is given for Griel's fifteen years of service to students and the University.

The 63rd Little International is an official part of the 125th anniversary year of Penn State

The beef cattle judge is this year's Distinguished Alumnus. Klippenstein is a partner in the Glennkirk Farms, a 5200 acre beef cattle operation in Maysville, Mo. Klippenstein has shown and judged cattle world-wide.

In conjunction with the Little International, a livestock judging contest will be held April 12 at the Penn State Beef and Sheep Center. Contest chairman is Ken Winebark of Rochester Mills.

This event holds special interest for members of FFA and 4-H clubs. Three divisions of (1) amateur, (2) 4-H and FFA, and (3) collegiate professionals (students) will judge beef cattle, sheep, and swine.

Concluding the activities will be a banquet the night of April 26 in the Hetzel Union Building at University Park. Awards will go to winners of Show Day events as well as the judging contests of April 12.

Order 4 May milk set at $14.37

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — Middle Atlantic Order Market Administrator Joseph D. Shine Friday announced a Class I milk price of $14.37 per hundredweight for May 1980.

This price is 24 cents above the April price, and up one dollar from last May. Order No. 4 prices are announced for milk testing 3.5 percent butterfat, f.o.b. plants located within 55 miles of Philadelphia, and also within 75 miles from the nearer of Washington, D.C. or Baltimore, MD.

There is also a six-cent direct-delivery differential applicable to producer milk received at plants located within 55 miles of Philadelphia.

Shine announced a Class II milk price of $11.56 per hundredweight for March 1980 and a butterfat differential of 15.0 cents for the month. The Class II milk price was up 17 cents from the previous month while the butterfat differential was unchanged from February.

These class prices are based on the March 1980 Minnesota-Wisconsin manufacturing milk price of $11.59 per hundredweight adjusted to a 3.5 percent butterfat content.

The USDA reported that the wholesale price of Grade A butter at Chicago for March was $1.3035 per pound and the nonfat dry milk price was $.8424 per pound, f.o.b. plants in the Chicago area.

Hallowell said the state so far has found no soil additive products, with the exception of some vermiculite and peat moss products, which can prove their claims and that the Department has refused to license any of them.

"The results are constantly zero," he said, adding the only reason Agrispon was allowed on the market this year was because of its pending protest.

Alexander said Agrispon sales this spring in Pennsylvania were good.

The state Fertilizer law was signed by then Governor Milton Shapp on December 1, 1977. Regulations to provide registration and labeling requirements under the ammended law were proposed in Pennsylvania Bulletin No. 30, July 8, 1979 and were adopted on September 1, 1979, published in Pennsylvania Bulletin No. 35.

Under rules and procedure, manufacturers or importers of soil conditioners or plant growth substances must register their product with the Department of Agriculture before being offered for sale in the Commonwealth.

The initial denial of label was made October 1, 1979, and at that time Agrispon requested a hearing.

USDA to amend Middle Atlantic order

LANCASTER — An amendment has been issued that will allow farmers operating under the Middle Atlantic federal milk marketing order to use a larger share of their milk payments for advertising and promotion, it was announced by officials of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

P.R. Smith, assistant secretary of agriculture for marketing and transportation services, said that the amended order and the amended advertising and promotion program has been approved by more than two-thirds of the producers involved.

Smith pointed out that the order will change the way assessments for advertising and promotion are calculated. Assessments--now on a fixed rate schedule--will be based on the average prices that handlers pay farmers for their milk. The new rate will be one percent of the weighted average prices during the six month period ending Sept. 30 of the preceding year.

The change will increase assessments to 12 cents per hundredweight for the 1980 crop--up from the current seven cents, Smith said. This increase will have no effect on the retail price of milk to consumers.

Another change will result in producers who don't wish to participate in the advertising and promotion program having to file a request for a refund only once a year rather than each quarter. Also, producers will be able to receive refunds monthly.

The amended order also will establish a late-payment charge on overdue payments to producers, cooperatives, and the market administrator.

Another change will require the market administrator to make payments due handlers from the producer-settlement fund on or before the 16th rather than the 17th day after the end of each month, Smith said.

The order will become partially effective June 1, 1980, and fully effective July 1, 1980.

The June 1 effective date, which will allow 30 days' notice, applies to the late-payment and other provisions for notifying producers of the changes in the advertising and promotion program.

The July 1 effective date pertains to the change in the funding rate of the advertising and promotion program and coincides with the beginning of a quarterly budgeting period. The amended order was published in the April 17 Federal Register.

Farm real estate values jump 14 percent

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Farmland values rose an average of 14 percent during the 12 months ending February 1, 1980. This increase is about the same rate as a year earlier, according to a supplement to Farm Real Estate Market Developments, to be released by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The supplement, prepared by USDA's Economics, Statistics, and Cooperatives Service, notes that higher net farm incomes during 1979 and general optimism about farm conditions appeared to be the important influences that more than offset the moderating effects of changes in the cost and availability of farm real estate loans.

Seven states had increases of 20 percent or more, with most of the largest gains in the Mississippi Delta states.

Farmland values increased 6 percent from November 1, 1979 to February 1, 1980, repeating the 6-percent rise during the same period a year earlier. Since 1975, farm real estate values have risen an average of 14 percent for the 12-month period ending in February, ranging from a low of 9 percent for the year ending in February 1978 to a high of 17 percent for the year ending February 1977.

TO READ THE LABEL

It's not the use of pesticides that causes the most trouble, it's the mis-use of them In many cases after a person gets into trouble with some spray material, then they study the label and other instructions. We strongly urge that you read and study the label before the material is applied. All pesticides are approved for a special use, at a special time, and at a definite rate. When these instructions are not followed, a person could do harm and also, get into trouble Good management, and the use of good sanitary practices, is a part of pest control; the use of pesticides should supplement these other practices; do not depend only on the spray materials to solve the problem. I think this program is called Integrated Pest Management. Use spray materials when good management and good sanitation practices need help

TO MANAGE DAIRY HERDS ON PASTURE

The pasture season is here when many herds of livestock will enjoy grazing the lush growth of forage crops. Dairymen must be careful to prevent "grassy-flavored" milk This is especially true if there are any wild garlic plants in the pasture area. If these garlic plants are present, then only dry cows and heifers should be on the area; these plants consumed by a milking cow will surely result in "onion-flavored" milk — a sure cause for the rejection of a tank of milk Normal pastures should be grazed by the milking herd only after the milking period, and kept off the area for at least four hours prior to the next milking. Also, the continued feeding of hay, or other dry matter, while on lush pasture is strongly suggested Milk quality is very important at all times, but requires special management with the herd on pasture.

FFA public speaking contests held

ELVERSON — Howard Griest III and Stephen Kearns emerged as winners of two divisions of the Berks County FFA Public Speaking Contest held recently at the Berks County Agricultural Center.

In the extemporaneous contest, Griest placed first, with his speech, The Magic of Cooperation. Bruce Latshaw of Kutztown was second with The Good Earth. Richard Harshberger of Kutztown was third with Survival for Agriculture. Other contestants were Tom Snyder of Twin Valley and Keith Flicker of Kutztown.

In the extemporaneous contest, speakers chose topics for their speeches by drawing them from a hat Each contestant is then given 30 minutes to prepare his speech which lasts from four to six minutes. Speeches are judged on the basis of content, delivery, and preparedness.

Judges for the contest were Christopher Haring, teacher at Kutztown High and Darlene Staudt, Farm Credit, Shoemakersville. Top three extemporaneous speakers will compete in the Berks - Lebanon - Schuylkill area FFA contest in April. The county contest is the first step in FFA competition which progresses through area, regional, state, national, regional, and finally a national contest at the National FFA Convention in Kansas City in November.

In the conservation speaking contest, Steve Kearns captured first place with a speech on integrated pest management. Bruce Latshaw of Kutztown was second with America's Agricultural Waterloo and Roger Stoltzfus of Twin Valley placed third.

Other conservation speakers were Laura Miller of Tulpehocken, Warren Kirkner of Twin Valley, Gerald Haas of Kutztown and Mark Latshaw of Kutztown. Judges for the conservation contest were Mary Ann Rimby, Berks County Soil Conservation District and Carl Graybill of the Pennsylvania Game Commission. In this contest only the top individual will progress directly to the Eastern Pennsylvania Regional Contest in April.

In the general FFA speaking contest Steve Imes of Oley placed first with Food for Fuel. Deborah Miller of Conrad Weiser was second with American Farmer, Take a Bow. A Profit Today, A Loss Forever earned third place for Michael Mertz of Kutztown. Other contestants were Donald Stoltzfus, Diane Stoltzfus and Linda Robinson all from Twin Valley and Richard Savidge and Todd Benjamin of Kutztown. Eugene Richards, American Bank and Clyde Myers, Berks County agent, served as judges for this contest. Top three contestants will again compete in the B-L-S Area contest in April.

Chester livestock dealer charged with bonding violation

CHESTER — John A. Przychodzki, Chester, a livestock dealer, has been charged with violating bonding requirements of the Packers and Stockyards Act.

Przychodzki does business throughout Pennsylvania.

In an administrative complaint filed by the U.S. Department of Agriculture, he was charged with operating his business without adequate bond coverage, despite being notified of the need to increase his bond.

Przychodzki has a right to a hearing. If the evidence supports the charge, he would be placed under a cease and desist order and his registration could be suspended.

The P&S Act is a fair trade practices law. It promotes and maintains fair and open competition in the buying and selling of livestock meat and poultry.

The Vicon KM-240 cuts and conditions the tallest, tangled, wettest, heaviest, hay This new mower-conditioner eliminates a pick-up reel, so you can put up more hay — FASTER With a working width of 7'10", it can mow twice as much area in a day as most competitive models Most competitors use a pick-up reel, which limits ground speed, adds maintenance problems and allows leaf loss

The Vicon six-disc cutter bar feeds your crop directly, stem first, into rubber rollers that condition green hay or wet grass It dries faster and bales easier, saving time and labor

The KM-240 has no chains, no belts, no sickle bar If you need only a mower, look at the Vicon CM-165 (4 discs – 5½' working width) or the CM-240 (6 discs – 7'10" working width) Both make clean cuts in heavy grass or tangled crops

Top price for a bred heifer at Thursday's State Sale was $3,800 for "Glen Valley Bootmaker Trudy," consigned by Harold Umble, Atglen.

Pa. Holstein Show, Sale

Another calf brought the second highest price of the sale of $5,300. Consigned by Emil G. Peters, Port Matilda, "Peters Farm Kingpin Mist," was bought by Marlin G. Bricker, Chambersburg.

Both of the animals topped last year's highest calf price of $5,200.

But it was a different story entirely for the individual bred heifer prices.

The top heifer price this year was $3,800 for "Glen Valley Bootmaker Trudy." Consigned by Harold M. Umble, Atglen. She was purchased by David and Mark C. Campbell, R1, Ford City.

Last year's top heifer brought $6,400.

In this year's sale, a total of seven calves brought better individual prices than the $3,800 paid for the top 1980 heifer.

"It was still a real good sale," said William C. Nichol, Executive Secretary of the Pennsylvania Holstein Association.

"It didn't come up to last year's exceptional prices and part of the reason may be due to the tight money situation showing some effects."

Although there were buyers from 13 states besides Pennsylvania, according to Nichol, there was an overall decrease in the number of buyers attending from distant states.

One potential buyer commented as he held back from submitting a bid:

"You gotta be thinking of those interest rates as you consider making a bid.

"Milk prices aren't that bad, but they'll get eaten up pretty quickly by those rates."

When interest shifted to the large arena Thursday night, an evening-long session of judging resulted in the crowning of "Northcroft Ella Elevation" as the Grand Champion Female,

(Turn to Page A28)

State Holstein Show's junior champion female is "Janice Ultimate Jody," senior yearling heifer, shown with Rodney Meyers, R2, Chambersburg.

From right, John Hoffman, Poultry Federation Director; Jim Wolf, Chairman of PPF board of directors; Dale M. Weaver and Bill Carlin, co-chairman of the banquet committee with Robert Graybill, not present, congratulated one another on the banquet's success.

About 1000 of the 1670 guests at the Pennsylvania Poultry Federation Banquet filled the Cabaret Room of the Host Farm to support the annual fund raising event.

Poultry banquet

meal was complemented with wild rice pilaf and whole green beans.

Main purpose of the event was to provide operating revenue for PPF which represents the state's $300 million poultry industry.

The banquet attendance this year was almost exactly 200 persons more than the 1979 version. In 1978, attendance was just over 1200.

Hoffman credited the Banquet Committee Co-Chairmen for the evening's success. The Committee again consisted of Robert Graybill, Pennfield Corporation; William Carlin, Hubbard Farms; and Dale M. Weaver, Victor M. Weaver, Inc.

Throngs of poultrymen, industrymen, and dignitaries from supporting political and organizational groups packed the Host Farm Resort lobby where hors d'oeuvres were served.

Both the Baroque Ballroom and the Cabaret of the Host were comfortably filled with dinner guests.

Entertainment in both rooms consisted of country music from Danny Davis and the Nashville Brass and comedy from Charlie Dornan, billed as the boy from New Hampshire and known for his many appearances on the old Jack Paar show.

Among the honored guests were poultry industrymen and their wives at the head table in the Ballroon.

Broiler Industryman of the Year are Ken and Cora Longacre. Emerson and Candace Measheу were honored as Turkey Industrymen of the Year. Walter and Jean Wheelock were cited as Egg Industrymen of the Year.

Officials of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture graced the head table in the Cabaret Room.

John Hoffman gave much of the credit for the evening's success to the Gold Feather Salespersons, supporters who sold an outstanding number of tickets to the PPF Banquet.

Among the Gold Feather salespersons for 1980 are: Jules Bauerman, Horace W. Longacre, Inc.; Earl Birk, Pennfield Corp.; Robin Bissell, Horace W. Longacre, Inc.; Thomas Bross, Round Hill Foods, Inc.; and Galen Buckwalter, Lehman's Egg Service.

Also, Jean Cannon, Victor F. Weaver; William Carlin, Hubbard Farms; A. Reynolds Coulson, J.C. Snavely & Sons; Jay Greider, Greider Farms; Cleve Hastings, Pennfield; Joyce Hershey, Hershey Equipment Co.; Barbara Hess, Plain & Fancy Egg Ranch; and Dave Johnson, Pennfield.

Also, Carl Kauffman, Pennfield; Lowell Koch, Koch's Turkey Farm; Jay Krider and James Lafferty, Victor F. Weaver; Vernon Leininger, Ko-Ka-Le-Ko Egg Ranch; Kenneth Longacre, Horace W. Longacre, Inc.; Harvey Mapes, Pennfield; J. Elvin Martin, Jr., Agri-Inc

And Clarence Mitchel, Buffalo Valley Products, Inc.; Melvin Mitchell and Willis McCarty, Victor F. Weaver; William Murray, Empire Kosher Poultry, Inc.; James Price, Beacon Milling; Paul Seaman, Jr. and Paul Seaman, Sr., Horace W. Longacre; Allen Shade, Agway; Dale L. Weaver, Dale M. Weaver, and Donald Welk, all of Victor F. Weaver.

And Paul Whipple, Pennfield; James Wolf, Wolf Farms, Inc.; John Zerbe, Ralston Purina Company; and Leroy Zimmerman, Zimmerman's Turkey Farm were honored with the Golden Feather.

National soils contest coming to Penn State

UNIVERSITY PARK — On April 18, 64 college students from 16 campuses throughout the U.S. will be coming to Penn State with a battle cry of "Into the pits".

Donning mud-stomping boots and arming themselves with pocket-knives, these student will jump into the trenches to compete in the 20th National Intercollegiate Soil Judging Contest.

Grabbing samples from each soil layer, contestants feel the soil for its texture. They look at the soil structure, color, mottling or streaking of different colors, and coarseness of fragments.

"With this information," Roger Pennock from Penn State's Department of Agronomy stated, "they draw conclusions about specific soil properties. How deep can plants roots grow? What is the parent material of the soil, and how much erosion has occurred?

"Then the students make decisions about how the soil can be used—whether for a building, septic system, or road. And of course the soil's potential for agriculture is estimated."

Each contestant has four pits, he said, to describe before the competition is over. Location of the soil pits will be kept secret until competition begins Friday morning. Within a 50 minute time limit, the contestants must examine the exposed soil surface and make their detailed interpretation of the pits dug into the natural landscape.

Judgments of the students are compared with official judgments by people from the U.S. Soil Conservation Service and Penn State. Students coming closest to the official scores are the winners.

In the past year, the Penn State team won high honors. The team placed second overall at the national contest last April in Bozeman, Montana, with the individual champion being Kathy Connors of Edinboro.

As host, the team is ineligible to compete this year. But last October, the Penn State team took top honors in regional competition and had the first, second, third, and fifth highest scoring individuals.

The 16 teams competing April 18 are all regional winners of first, second or third place. In the local area, Region 1, teams will enter from Delaware Valley College at Doylestown, and from the University of Maryland at College Park.

The other teams will come from the University of Florida, the University of Tennessee, Auburn University, Purdue University, University of Wisconsin-Platteville, Texas Tech University, University of Arkansas, Tarleton State University in Texas, University of Minnesota, Kansas State University, Washington State University, Montana State University, New Mexico State University, and the University of Arizona.

VVND confirmed in Pennsylvania

CAMP HILL — The Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture's Division of Animal Health confirmed a case of the new Exotic Newcastle disease in Pennsylvania.

The VVND was found in a pet bird in a pet store in Camp Hill, Cumberland County.

Since the Department's announcement Tuesday, seven pet shops have been quarantined. Six are in the Harrisburg-York area and one is in Clearfield.

A Federal-State task force has been formed to combat the problem.

All auctions have been told to hold all sales of poultry, fowl, and other birds, and hatching eggs as a precaution against further damage to the state's $300 million a year poultry and egg industry.

The Ag Department said they saw the outbreak as a potential hazard and are taking all precautions against its spread.

The pet bird was scheduled to be showed at a York show. That show and one other have been cancelled.

The Pennsylvania Poultry Federation is urging producers to "hang tough for a few days until the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture has the matter under control."

PPF said poultrymen should control entry into all houses by everyone.

It incouraged members to report immediately any sick birds to agriculture officials.

Any absolutely necessary servicing should be done by individuals properly attired and wearing disinfected boots.

The Federation discouraged making any unnecessary visits to other poultry farms.

More pounds per acre with Bravo®.

Start the season with Bravo 500 fungicide. Stay with it right up to harvest (in California, up to 24 hours before harvest).

That's the Bravo 500 formula. Follow it and you'll control all 8 major tomato diseases and start getting better yields and profits.

Bravo effectiveness is backed by 7 years of testing against other leading fungicides in university trials. Crops sprayed with Bravo on a full and regular schedule produced an average of over 2800 more pounds of high quality tomatoes per acre.

It just confirms what a lot of tomato growers have known for a long time. You start with Bravo 500 and stick with it all season long.

Because spray for spray. . .acre for acre, Bravo 500 flowable fungicide is the most effective way to control disease and get bigger yields.

Bravo 500. Wherever healthy tomatoes are grown, it's the name that keeps cropping up.

Stockyards to hold beef meeting

NEW HOLLAND — Abram Diffenbach, president and manager of New Holland Sales Stables, announced a meeting for beef producers will be held next Wednesday, April 16.

The meeting, which will take place at the stockyards at 7 p.m., is for the purpose of letting beef producers talk to packers and butchers about beef prices, said Alan Diffenbach, field representative for the Sales Stables.

Diffenbach said there will be large and small packers and retailers at the meeting to field the producers' questions. Mike Silverberg from Moyer Packing, Vernon Trueth from Trueth Packing of Baltimore, Max Rosenberg from Linden Packing in New Jersey, and Carl Venezia, a retail butcher near Norristown will be the panelists.

"The reason behind this meeting is to let the farmers and the packers get to know each other," said Diffenbach. "The packers aren't always trying to rob the producer. They both need each other."

He added the meeting is not to discuss the current market trends, but to talk about the future of the meat industry, the push for leaner meat, and how the prices are determined.

"We're trying to promote better understanding instead of pitting the buyer against the seller," Diffenbach stressed. "The packers and the producers need each other more so today with the fuel situation and the big transport expense to bring cattle in from out West."

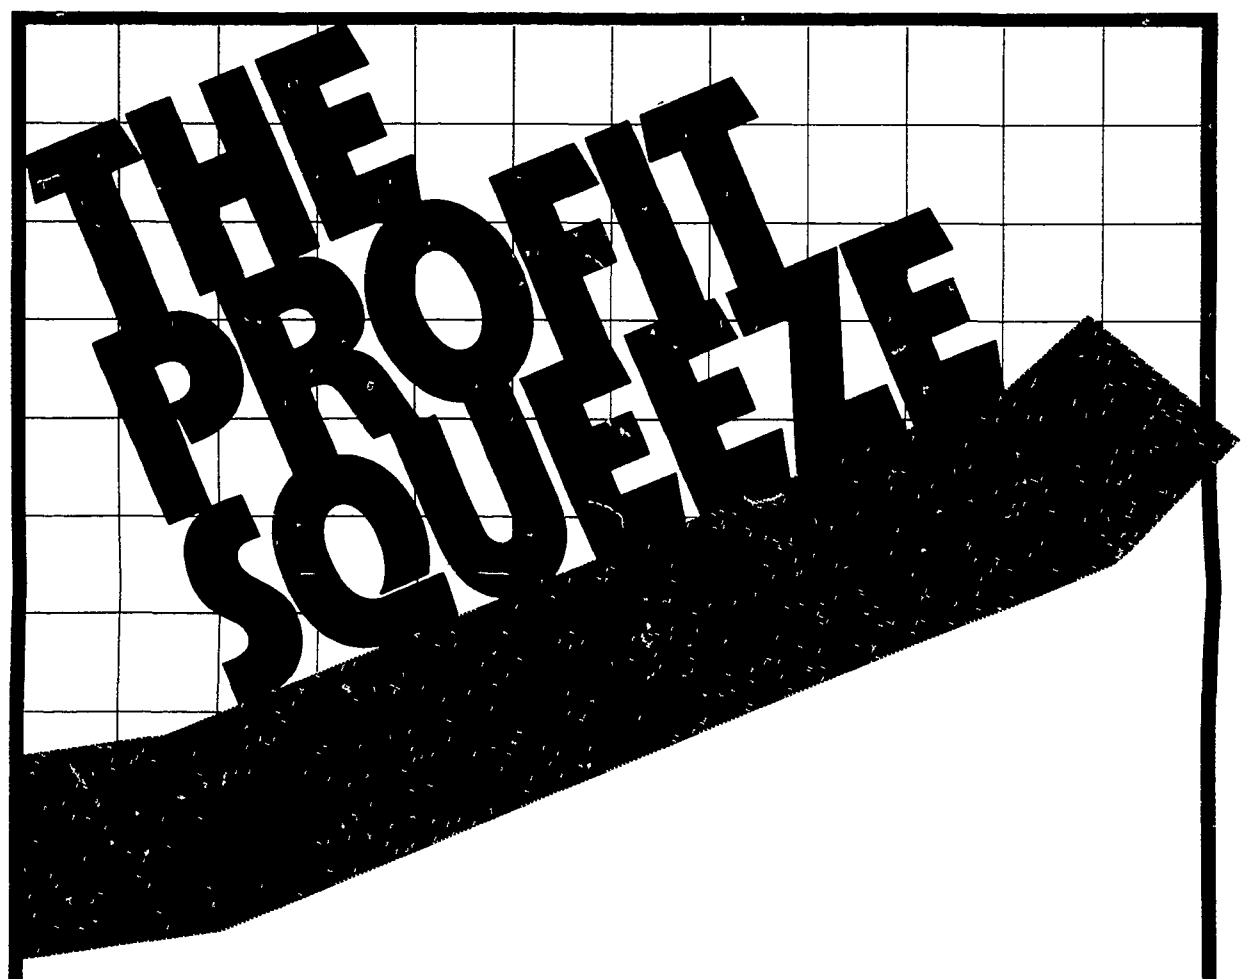
THE PROFIT SQUEEZE



NO.1 REASON FOR NO-TILL.

No matter how you slice it, No-Tillage farming is more economical than conventional farming and every bit as productive. The secret is a super-efficient herbicide called ORTHO Paraquat CL. It kills on contact with extraordinary speed and destroys an exceptionally broad spectrum of unwanted weeds and grasses.

After spraying with Paraquat and your recommended residual herbicide, you simply plant corn or soybeans right into the stubble of a preceeding crop. There is no tillage involved. You save time, labor, and since No-Till is a once across the field operation, significant fuel costs. For best results, apply Paraquat with ORTHO X-77® Spreader.

DANGER: Paraquat is highly toxic if swallowed and should be kept out of the reach of children. To prevent accidental ingestion, never transfer to food, drink or other containers. Read the label carefully and follow all directions, danger statements and worker safety rules. Restricted Use Pesticide. Use all chemicals only as directed.

County Guernsey breeders hold annual spring tour

LANCASTER — The Lancaster County Guernsey Breeders annual spring tour was held last Monday. Breeders visited a processing facility, dairy farms, and a shoe factory.

The group saw the newest and most modern milk processing plant in the east, the Mt. Holly Milk Cooperative Plant. It was processing whole milk powder, nonfat dry milk, and buttermilk powder very smoothly.

The 30 Guernsey breeders could witness a continuous flow of butter, coming out of two machines at the rate of 8000 pounds per hour. This butter was then swiftly packaged into 68 lbs. containers.

This plant will play a very important role in the coming milk flush month, because the perishable milk will be dried and can later be use for chocolate, such as M&Ms, cakes, pies, shortening, and other products.

Guernsey breeders then saw the dairy of the Lester VanArsdale family in Biglerville. Close to 200 Guernseys are kept in an enclosed loose housing system. A herringbone milking parlor with automatic takeoff milkers works very well here. One is impressed with the cleanliness of the milk area and the lack of any strong smells in the area.

All the manure from the loose housing area is pushed underground and stored in an adjacent building with a wide overhanging roof. No surface water can go into this building and a man could actually walk on the pack. This system seems to be the most efficient for their system.

The washwater and the milkhouse wastes flow into a pond-like lagoon. It takes large equipment to operate this 600 acre dairy in Adams county, but all this is possible through their income from their Guernsey cows.

The emphasis was on the cows at the next stop, Mervin K. Myers and Sons, Piney Lane Farm, Littlestown.

While these farmers were given a review of the herd which features Sniders Prince Lily (E 90) a two time National Class Leader.

Lily won the Tarbell Trophy in 1978 with her 2-09 fat record of 1203 pounds of fat in 305 days.

The group saw her first embryo transplant, a March heifer calf by Maverick.

Also at the Myers is McDonald's Farm Darimost Linda (E 91) the dame of McDonald's Top Pilot whose current proof is +1173 and +25F. Linda is still working hard and has out over 8000lbs. of butterfat in her lifetime. Many other outstanding cow families enthused the Lancaster County group.

Progress could also be seen on this farm with its new manure storage system and pickett fence. This farm is bordered by housing from nearby Littlestown and the environment has to be carefully observed.

For dairy farmer it is good to see other people working in factories. How are shoes made? Well, Hanover Shoe Factory gave the group a very good inside view. The piece work of the assemblying is done in a new facility and there are many single jobs involved in its production. Laborers have to work fast and intensely.

The Guernsey men gave thanks to the generous hostesses and to the committee of Kenneth Garber, Willow Street; and Jesse Balmer, Lititz, for arranging an enjoyable tour.

Milk support price increases to $12.07

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The support price for manufacturing grade milk containing 3.5 percent milkfat will be raised from $11.22 to $12.07 per hundredweight on April 1, Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland said Monday.

For milk with a U.S. annual average milkfat content of 3.67 percent, the new support price is equivalent to $12.36 compared with the present $11.49.

Current law requires the milk support prices be adjusted semi-annually to reflect the estimated change in the parity index (index of prices paid by farmers for commodities and service, interest, taxes and wage rates) during the first half of the marketing year.

Bergland announced March 28 that the support price for manufacturing milk would be increased based on data published in the "Agricultural Prices" report.

The parity index on Oct. 1, 1979—the beginning of the marketing year—was 866 (the period 1910 - 1914 equals 100). The index published today is 932, which is 7.6 percent higher than six months ago. Thus, the support price was raised by 7.6 percent, or 85 cents per hundredweight.

The prices at which USDA's Commodity Credit Corporation will offer dairy products for sale for unrestricted use will continue to be 105 percent of the current purchase price for these commodities. However, for September 1980 the sellback prices will be increased to approximately the projected purchase prices to be in effect after the new support price is announced for the 1980-81 marketing year beginning Oct. 1.

The support for milk is achieved by CCC purchases of butter, cheese and nonfat dry milk at prices calculated to enable manufacturing plants, on the average, to pay producers the support price for their milk.

Hog producers slate special meeting

LANCASTER — Lancaster County will hold a special meeting for all swine feeders and breeders.

The meeting will run this Wednesday evening, April 16, starting at 7:30 p.m. in the basement meeting room of the Farm and Home Center.

County Agent Max Smith said the meeting was to help swine producers, already faced with a tight financial situation, to reduce pig and hog losses and increase margins.

Speakers for the meeting will include a pair of veterinarians, Dr. Neil Becker and Dr. Larry Hutchinson

Dr Becker, from the University of Florida, will discuss health problems of young pigs.

He plans to post an unthrifty feeder pig at the meeting and discuss what he finds on the inside.

Dr. Hutchinson, a Penn State vet, will discuss Haemophilus pneumonia

This infection is becoming quite serious in the southeastern part of the state, according to Smith, and swine producers need to know more about this threat to the swine industry

The meeting is free and open to any interested swine producer.

Brief answers to short questions

Sheila's Shorts

By Sheila Miller

Which end's up?

A Lancaster Farming reader recently wrote in and asked:

When building fence, what end of the post do you put in the ground—the large end or the small end? I have been told that if the wrong end is turned down, the post will not last as long. Will you tell me why?

H.T. Gummo, Lamar, PA

I was a bit surprised to get a question on which end of a fence post should be up because I had never given it too much thought in the past.

Trying to find something in black and white to quote to H.T., I checked through my how-to-do-it-on-the-farm texts that I consider my "agricultural bibles".

Well, I found everything but what I was searching for. So, I checked with my next good-as-gold source, the Lancaster County Extension Agent, Max Smith.

Without even a pause to catch his breath, Max said, "Why, you put the bigger end in the ground. That way it won't rot off as fast."

So, there's your answer, H.T. Gummo.

Bread for FFA,4-H projects

If you're an FFA or 4-H member and you would like to have a work project this year, but just can't seem to come up with the money to buy a calf, lamb, pig, or materials, don't despair.

Your local Farmers Home Administration agent my be able to save the day by lending you the cash you need.

The FmHA can give loans to rural residents who are between the ages of 10 and 21 for the purpose of starting and operating farm or nonfarm FFA or 4-H projects.

Here are some of the rules that will help you determine if you would qualify for an FmHA loan.

—You must be a citizen of the U.S.

—You must be 10 years old, but under 21.

—You have to live in the country or in a town of less than 10,000 people.

—You must be unable to get a loan from another source(not too hard with the money situation these days).

—You must conduct a modest income-producing project in a supervised program of work

—You must show you have a good character and are capable of planning, managing, and operating the project under the guidance and assistance of a project advisor.

—The project advisor must recommend the project and the loan and agree to provide adequate supervision.

FmHA points out that nearly any kind of income-producing project is possible, such as crop and livestock production, repair or woodworking shops, reupholstering or refinishing furniture, roadside stands and many others.

If FmHA would approve your loan, the money could be used to buy livestock and farm equipment; buy, rent or repair needed tools and equipment; pay operating expenses for running the project; and for buying supplies.

Your first step in applying for your loan is to decide on your project and then work out the budget that you will need to complete it. This should be done with your advisor.

The FmHA agent will tell you about the current interest rates and the security and repayment requirements.

If you need financial help, it will be a good learning experience just to go through the process of applying for a small loan. Someday, this experience may help you in buying a farm or a herd of top-notch cows.

So, don't be discouraged by the seemingly endless red tape. Just keep in mind that FmHA is a branch of the federal government's Department of Agriculture, and all good things take time and effort.

Governor signs alien farmland bill

HARRISBURG — Gov. Dick Thornburgh has signed into law HB 1778.

H.B. 1778, sponsored by Rep. June N. Honaman, Landisville, limits the ownership of Pennsylvania farmland by aliens. Under the new law, non-resident aliens may not own more than 100 acres of agricultural land. The legislation does not apply to:

Land acquired by device of inheritance by Class A beneficiaries (for example, grandparents, parents, spouses and lineal descendents).

Land acquired by "process of law in the collection of debts," provided the lands are disposed of within three years of acquiring title.

Non-residents who become bona fide residents.

"Although alien investment in farmland is thus far a small problem in Pennsylvania, we must ensure that our agricultural lands are preserved for the family farmer," said Thornburgh.

Of more than six million acres of agriculture land in the Commonwealth, only 1704 acres of crop and pasture land currently are owned by foreigners.

Tomato growers to meet to find other markets

LEWISBURG — All farmers who have been affected by the American Home Foods cancellation of tomato contracts are urged to attend a meeting to explore the possibilities of new markets for their tomatoes or alternative crops for their fields.

Attending the meeting will be Pennsylvania Agriculture Secretary Penrose Hallowell, Regional Director Marlin McClellan, State Representative Reno Thomas, Assistant Director Agriculture-Home Economics Extension Service Frank Zettle, Extension Vegetable Specialist Peter Ferretti, Union County Extension Agent Amos Zimmerman, Furmans Canning Company President David Geise and American Home Foods Plant Manager Vaughn Staller.

"This meeting was set up at the request of Representative Reno Thomas and is jointly sponsored by the Department of Agriculture and The Pennsylvania State University Extension Service," said Hallowell.

"We are trying hard to replace the sudden loss of markets for tomato growers in this area."

Furman Canning Company has expressed an interest in increasing their red tomato contracts with local growers for their plant in Allentown.

There will also be a discussion of which crops can be best grown in the area.

The meeting will be held at the Farmer's Best in East Lewisburg on Route 405, one mile north of Route 45, at 10 a.m. on Tuesday, April 15.

Illegal DES

until the turnaround this week. But, Reed said he doesn't feel the DES cattle are enough to have a permanent effect on the cattle market. "The reaction has already been absorbed in the prices."

Long range increases in cattle prices, Reed said, will be influenced more by high interest rates. "By next Fall, we'll be seeing the impact of high feed costs on the numbers of cattle fed. With prices so unreliable, there won't be the large numbers of cattle showing up at the market."

Max Smith, Lancaster County Extension Agent, said the DES controversy won't have an effect on many local cattle producers because not many of them are using the drug in their feeding program.

But as Reed pointed out, the Eastern cattle prices are based on the Chicago price standard.

"You're not going to find much variation between the prices paid out West, and the prices cattle will bring in the East for any length of time," he said. "When folks around here listen to the markets on the radio, the prices they hear quoted are Peoria, Oklahoma, and Joliet cattle."

With cattle numbers already down, the prices paid for those that make it to market, especially if the DES cattle are banned, will be higher in the future.

Since March, an investigation by FDA has revealed widespread disregard for the ban, with 30 feedlots identified as using DES implants after November.

The FDA search found two Western companies selling DES after the July deadline. They were Walco International, Inc. of Porterville, California, and Schmidt-Allen, of Greeley, Colorado. These companies are calling back all existing stocks of the drug on a voluntary basis.

For those feedlots that have used the implant on cattle, USDA and FDA has advised them that they may not slaughter the cattle until the implants have been surgically removed by or under the supervision of a USDA-accredited veterinarian.

These same cattle have to be held for at least 35 days after the implant has been removed—63 days if the liver or kidney are to be used for human food because of drug residues.

Then, the feedlot must present the government with an affidavit, sworn to by a USDA-accredited veterinarian, stating when the implant was removed.

"We will take immediate action against those who have violated this ban, including criminal cases where appropriate," stated the government officials. "We have already discussed with the Justice Department the most expeditious way to proceed against those who have violated the law. The maximum penalty for violating the Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, with intent to defraud or mislead, is three years imprisonment and a $10,000 fine for each count."

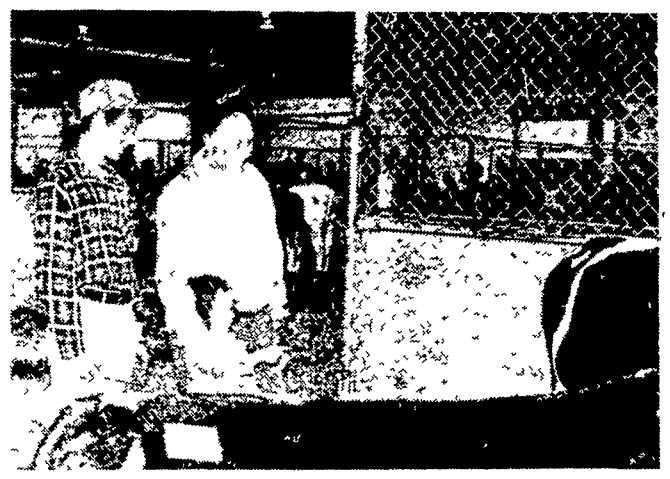
Calf sale

Sales catalogue is given careful scrutiny by George Schick, Mechanicsburg, to check the pedigree of Holstein calf in which he is interested.

Final grooming just before being led into sale ring is given calf by Pat Cunningham, Philadelphia, employee of the State Holstein Association.

Lancaster County twins, Michelle and Melanie Bushong, Columbia, are partial to this calf. Bushong family came to sale in hopes of finding 4-H calf.



Walking through the aisles and surveying the animals prior to the start of State Holstein Calf Sale is often a family affair. Perry Kretzing and son, Allen, and daughter, Colleen, Perry County, move in close for a better look.

Friends of 4-H volunteer group organized

UNIVERSITY PARK — In hopes of making a good thing even better, a number of prominent business-industry leaders and educators met at Penn State recently to develop new sources of financial support for the state's 4-H educational program.

The Pennsylvania Friends of 4-H, a volunteer group interested in the development of youth, adopted a constitution and bylaws and elected officers for 1980.

Officers are: Russell Larson, retired Penn State provost, chairman; Thomas Bohlender, president of Brookfield Dairy, R1 Sharpsville, vice-chairman; and Maurice Kramer, state 4-H youth director at Penn State, secretary-treasurer.

Directors are: Fred Meckley, Meckley's Limestone Products, Herndon; Harold Ott, area 4-H agent, Sharon; and Casimir Welch, Westinghouse Electric Power Systems, Pittsburgh.

Other board members are John Aichele, Milton Hershey School, Hershey; Mark Branstetter, Sperry-New Holland, New Holland; Robert Biddle, Philadelphia Electric Company, Chester; Elbert Howarth, Alcoa Laboratories, New Kensington; Donald King, Whitmoyer Laboratories, Myerstown; C. R. Bryan, Delaware County Extension agent; and James Van Horn, extension rural sociologist at Penn State.

Serving as ex officio members are James Beattie, dean of the Penn State College of Agriculture, and Thomas King, associate director of the Pennsylvania Cooperative Extension Service.

"About 6 percent of the state's youth, ages 8-19, are involved in Extension service 4-H programs each year," points out Beattie. "There is the potential to reach many more young people in their developmental years with additional funds from the private sector."

Maurice Kramer, who will administer the funds, notes that the Pennsylvania Friends of 4-H efforts may assist in expanding 4-H volunteer involvement. It also can help in reaching new members, both rural and urban, and establish and support youth training and development facilities.

"Presently, individuals who wish to support Penn State's 4-H program do not have a viable mechanism to make financial contributions to expand program quality," the 4-H youth director explains. "Pennsylvania Friends of 4-H was organized for this purpose."

Perry 4-H Saddle Up Club

The Perry County 4-H Saddle Up Club will hold it's next meeting Tuesday, April 15 at 7:30 p.m. in the New Bloomfield Courthouse Conference Room.

A movie is scheduled and plans for a 4-H Open Horse Show, which will be held May 24 at 9 a.m. at the Newport Fairgrounds, will be discussed. New members are welcome. Reported by Teresa Miller.

How to move machinery without becoming a statistic

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — As farmers 'saddle up' in their tractors, trucks, spray rigs and other motorized equipment to begin the Spring planting season, they are asked to take an invisible rider along with them: highway courtesy.

The Maryland Agricultural Commission, advisory body to the state Department of Agriculture, reminds farmers that while they have free right to use the roads of the state just like everyone else, they should take care to exercise common sense when sharing the highway with faster moving traffic.

One of the best ways to avoid problems is for farmers to plan carefully their equipment movements so as to avoid being on the roads during rush hours.

State law allows farm equipment on the road and in fact grants agricultural machinery some favors in that tractors, combines, etc., do not have to be licensed. It does require flashing lights in many cases and display of the familiar slow moving vehicle emblems.

The Ag Commission points out that operators of farm machinery have to bear in mind that drivers of automobiles are not too familiar with farm machinery on the roads and in some cases, are actually terrified of meeting a large tractor on the road. Therefore, the commission says operators of the farm machinery should take extra care to look out for their traffic neighbors.

Besides, as one member of the Commission notes, "A farmer should never be in such a hurry that he can't take time for courtesy because he ought to want the other road users to have a safe and happy day so that they can come back as his customers three times a day.

Hereford High School FFA wins Maryland State corn contest

Members of the FFA crops committee at Hereford High School, Maryland, pose with trophy hardware during recent seventy-third annual meeting of the Maryland Crop Improvement Association. The FFA group was honored as first-place winner in the 1979 official state corn yield contest with a mark of 187.57 bushels per acre. This marked the first time that the contest has been won by an FFA chapter in Maryland. But it was the fifth consecutive victory by a Baltimore county representative. Show from left are: Bob Prigel, Sam Bosley, Mike Tracey, Laurel Cutter, Caroline Fiske (vo-ag teacher), Lisa Maenner, and John Badalato. Tracey is holding his first-place no-tillage award plate, while Badalato shows off his over-all championship plaque. Badalato was also student coordinator for the FFA corn-growing project.

Since SOIL CONDITIONER improves soil texture and water penetration, root development also improves. Root growth goes deeper into the subsoil for stored moisture and minerals. Roots produce more fine roots and root hairs, which allows roots more places to take up nutrients in the soil.

The now available nutrients in the soil are due in part to increased soil life. Because SOIL CONDITIONER has helped to cause an increase in soil life, there are now more available nutrients in the soil. Let SOIL CONDITIONER LEND "a helping hand" in your soil and water management.

Lebanon 4-H clubs 'subs'stantially boost their budgets

BY PAT KAUFFMAN

LEBANON — Picture 150 youngsters crying their eyes out at 4 a.m. on a Saturday morning. That's what one would expect to find upon entering a building where 4-Hers are making 8000 subs.

But to the amazement of everyone but Judy LeRoy, the scene was one of organized fun. For there amid 625 pounds of minced bologna, 375 pounds of white American cheese, 450 pounds of tomatoes, 200 pounds of onions, 50 pounds of lettuce, and 630 dozen rolls, stood kids up to their elbows in a good time.

Judy, a lady with a sprightly smile, was chief in charge of production at the recent Lebanon County 4-H sub sale. And while nearly 8000 subs would boggle most people's minds, she took it all in stride.

What is also interesting, is the ability of anyone to get over 100 youngsters out of bed and to the task of making subs at the awful hour of 4 a.m. According to Judy, the turnout was good. She noted that while there are over 1100 kids in 4-H in the county, that many of the clubs are run only from spring to fall and had not yet reorganized for the year.

The purpose of the sub sale was to raise money for fair premiums and 4-H projects throughout the year. While only about half of the clubs participated because of the seasonal factor, all of the clubs in the county will benefit from the earnings.

And the earnings are amazingly good. Doing a quick mental tally, Judy figured the clubs which sold the 8 inch subs for $1.25 each, neted in the vicinity of .80 per sub. That figure would mean a tidy profit of around $6000. Judy's husband, Bill, noted that figure would mean an average hourly earning per worker of approximately $9.

Bill had his own thoughts on the sub sale. He noted that both he and Judy are 4-H parents. In addition, they have organized many sub sales for Scout troops. He told that in his view the sub sales are the most successful fund raiser available for a 4-H club. While he and Judy have helped with other fund raising projects such as cookie sales, he stated that cookies are nothing more than "sugar pills," and that people buy a box or two and have enough. "The price of gas is an increasingly large cost in paper drives. With subs," he said, "Mothers know that on busy Saturday mornings their family is getting a wholesome noon meal and they are helping a worthwhile cause."

The clubs were each asked to sell 75 subs per club and to send at least 1 person to help make the subs.

How do you tackle making 8000 subs? Judy sums it up, "Organization." She told that long tables were covered with plastic. Pans with the ingredients were stationed in the proper order along the table, and kids lined both sides of the table. Then the subs were pushed along the table with each person adding his ingredient until the sub reached the end of the table where it was bagged, counted and packed in lots of tens. The younger 4-H members were used as runners and twisters (closing the sub bags).

Judy was quick to note that many grocers and wholesalers in the community had given time and loaned equipment to the group in addition to supplying the meats and salad ingredients of the subs at very reasonable prices.

Members selling the most subs had their pick of prizes including such things as sneaker skates, dinner for two, craft items and earphones. These prizes were also donations.

Is there any help available for clubs planning a sub sale? Judy plans to catch her wind after this latest big event, and then sit down and sketch out a master plan for clubs interested in substantially boosting their revenues with subs.

Fertilizer, conservation, fuel tax highlight Grange legislative meeting

HARRISBURG — When the State Grange legislative and agricultural committees met Tuesday in Harrisburg, fertilizer law, conservation, and the proposed fuel tax change were among the prime topics of consideration.

Agriculture Secretary Penrose Hallowell told Grangers that the state Fertilizer Advisory Committee is scheduled to meet April 25. The Committee, to large extent, is made up of fertilizer dealers.

Hallowell said the group will examine the effect of the current Fertilzier Law. He said the law is one of the strictest in the state. But, he added, the Department will enforce the law and if changes are needed, they will have to come from the legislature.

He said a couple of companies are upset with the provisions of the law. One firm owes upwards of $60,000 in fines and they are going to court to fight the fines.

These firms say the Department's methods of sampling are not accurate.

"There is no justification to me that their claims are based in fact," Hallowell said.

He said if the Grangers were to tour some of the plants in question they could see how mistakes could happen

The biggest problem is with bulk blended fertilizer, he said. In general, he said, ammoniated fertilizer comes accurately labeled. Liquids, too, give little trouble.

Problems generally come with blends which often are made with a front end loader and simple scales.

He said the Department will continue to check wherever possible.

Hallowell also urged farmers to vaccinate heifers for Brucellosis. He said about 80 percent of all heifers in the state now are vaccinated.

Pennsylvania currently has eight herds quarantined because of Brucellosis.

He said the ag budget for 1980, the third presented, was for the same dollars as last year. But, of course, this represents a cutback in actual funds available.

He told Grangers a noxious weed law is in the legislature. He said it will establish guidelines for identifying noxious weeds.

Hallowell said his new Chief of Market Services would be John Scott, former master of both the Pennsylvania and the National Granges.

Soil Conservation Service's Bruce Holbrook said his organization is attempting to develop a state conservation plan.

That plan for the State Conservation Committee will outline objectives for the next five years.

At present, a conservation evaluation is being distributed to local groups asking imput and evaluation of the conservation situation in four areas: soil, land, water, and people.

He said questions on preservation of agricultural land bring almost as many different ideas as there are responses. But, he noted, all segments seem to agree there is a problem.

He said the plan is only a schedule of efforts and ideas for the next five year's work. He said SCS is seeking no new laws in this area.

Among problems raised by the Grange committee members was protection of on-farm water supplies from deep wells, contamination, and gas drillers.

Concern was voiced about proper strip mine regulations and recovery programs.

The suggestion was raised that the state, through Pennsylvania Department of Transportation, and the state farms, should lead the way in conservation rather than being a contributor to many of the conservation problems suffered around the state.

Holbrook said SCS hopes to have a document ready by summertime to clarify its goals.

Tom Usidek of the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation outlined the proposed new gas tax regulations.

He said PennDOT has lost $60 million in revenue because of reduced fuel consumption. He also said the highway use has increased and along with it, the wear and tear on road surfaces.

He said PennDOT is promoting a program which would apply a flat five cent per gallon tax on retail fuel sales. Added to that would be a six percent tax.

As the price of fuel went up 25 cents a gallon, one-half cent would be taken off the flat rate. Eventually, at about $2.50 per gallon retail cost for fuel, there would be only the six percent charge and no flat rate.

Most important to farmers, the tax would be applied only at the retail level. Farm fuel tanks are considered wholesale level.

As a result, farmers would not have to pay the tax in the first place as they do today, so there would be no paperwork for the refund.

Usidek based his appeal on the idea that the change represents "more than a tax hike for PennDOT . . . we're talking about the vitality of Pennsylvania."

He said without the tax changes there would be road and bridge weight limits imposed, and speed limits on Interstate highways could drop to 45 or 35 mph to make them safe.

Also hit are the truckers. The tax package includes increased license fees for both inter-state and intra-state travel.

PennDOT still wants to return roads to the local municipalities. Usidek said the state would give the roads back in tip-top condition.

The state also will bargain with individual municipalities which feel they need more or less money to maintain a road or which wants to accept a road in poor condition and fix it itself.

Usidek said the average increase in cost under the new proposal would be about $15 to a typical motorist who drives 15,000 miles a year in a vehicle averaging 15 mpg.

By raising mpg from 15 to 17, the motorist could save that $15 a year, he added.

The Grangers also met with several state legislators at their dinner Tuesday night.

Earlier in the day they toured the manure generating facility at Mason-Dixon Farms near Gettysburg.—CH

Club congress held in Delaware County

Fifty-five 4-H members, leaders, and parents participated in the first annual Delaware County 4-H Club Congress recently, according to Keith Bryan, President of 4-H Teen Council.

They represented 11 clubs from throughout the county. The purpose of the meeting was to teach proper parliamentary procedure so that 4-H clubs in the county can become better organized and accomplish more. Improving the club business meeting, including recreation in the meeting, and using member demonstrations as a teaching tool were also stressed at the club congress.

Jimmy Short, Havertown, gave a demonstration on pyramids and a slide set, "The 4-H Meeting - A Teaching Tool" was presented by Jackie Brown.

A shot of alcohol awakens dormant seed

BELTSVILLE, Md. — A dose of grain alcohol has proven to be a promising potion in USDA attempts to force dormant weed seeds to germinate — research that might some day drastically reduce the crop weed problem.

Using ethanol, a USDA weed scientist has forced several annual weedy grasses and a few broadleaf weeds to germinate before their time. Although ethanol has not been tested in field conditions, it has stimulated a wider range of weed seeds than most other chemicals tested in the laboratory or the field, says R. B. Taylorson of USDA's Science and Education Administration.

The earth's reservoir of dormant seeds is the mainstay of the weed problems that plague farmers year after year.

"If most of these seeds could be forced to germinate at one time, they could be killed with herbicides before a crop was planted. And weed problems would be under control for many years to come," says Taylorson.

Some weed seeds can remain dormant in soil for as long as 100 years. Cultivated land usually contains about 10 million weed seeds per acre in the top six inches of soil. Some land may contain 100 million or more seeds.

Taylorson has had most success (100 percent germination) in forcing fall panicum—one of the principal weeds of corn and soybean acreage in the Northeast and Midwest.

Witchgrass, crabgrass, and barnyardgrass seeds responded at better than 50 percent germination, a rate Taylorson sees as the cutoff point for any seed eradication program to be cost effective.

Fall panicum and witchgrass germinated in complete darkness, but crabgrass and barnyardgrass needed red irradiation to induce germination. Wild oat and johnsongrass have been impervious to ethanol and several other anesthetics Taylorson tested.

So far, broadleaf germination has been under 50 percent.

Getting seeds to germinate in the absence of light is most important to any future weed-seed eradication program, says Taylorson.

Many weed seeds require exposure to the red band of the spectrum which triggers a chemical called phytochrome to initiate the growth process. Those that do germinate each year are exposed to sunlight through cracks in the soil or are brought to the surface during cultivation. But the vast majority of weed seeds rest in the darkness of the soil.

Taylorson attributes his good results with fall panicum to "hitting on the right set of conditions at the start." He expects that further experimentation will produce similar results in other grasses and broadleaf weeds.

The trick, he says, is to apply the right chemical in the correct dosage at the right time and temperature. Fall panicum probably responded best when incubated in the laboratory at 95° because it is a naturally late germinating grass, explained Taylorson.

There are several technical problems to be overcome before ethanol or other anesthetics could be tested in the field, he said. A method for keeping these highly volatile chemicals in the soil for at least four hours would have to be developed.

And the three percent solution of ethanol that was workable in the lab translates to a costly 120 to 160 gallons of ethanol per acre.

Taylorson noticed that anesthetics stimulated seeds to germinate while studying how they affect the properties of seed membranes. Exactly how anesthetics affect membranes is still a question, but the fact that they do is probably what triggers germination, he said.

He noted that several USDA and state agricultural scientists are exploring other germination stimulants for practical weed-seed eradication methods.

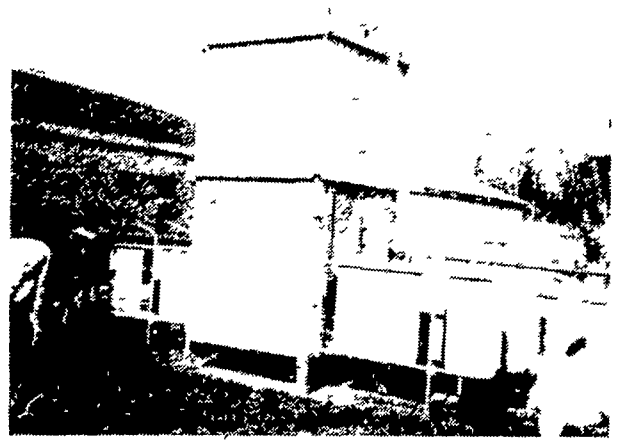
HERE ARE TWO FIRSTS FOR PENNSYLVANIA:



One, the first Satellite Challenge Feeder sold and installed on a Pennsylvania farm, and the first Challenge Feeder we have sold in Chester County, Pennsylvania.

This unique feeder is a compact assembly of two challenge feeders and the concentrate Storage bin - all in one package, which can be located in most feed lots without any further concrete work.

This unique feeder was installed on Mr. and Mrs. Richard Hoopes Farm at West Grove, Pennsylvania in December, 1979.

Mr. Hoopes states that this feeder is operating exactly as it is designed to do and he is sure that the cows like it very much from the usage it is getting. He can't verify how much more milk he is producing because he just started a new milking parlor in October and his cows need to get adjusted to all the new facilities.

He also is using the new DV 300 parlor model milker control in his parlor and is really sold on their performance.

Why not stop in at Mr. and Mrs. Hoopes farm and look over his new system and talk to them about their challenge feeder. He will be happy to talk about them.

We will be getting two more Satellite Challenge Feeders in stock in April - so if you are interested in this outstanding feeding mechanism that controls the amount of concentrate you want to feed your cows, just give us a call at 301-658-6923, and talk to any of our service personnel about your needs.

National Grange appointment

Mary Buffington is Director of Women's Activities

BY SUSAN KAUFFMAN
Staff Correspondent

"The Grange is a family organization," says Mary Buffington, the newly appointed Director of Women's Activities for the National Grange.

Mary and her husband Bill and their four children, daughter-in-law, son-in-law and grand children are all actively involved in the local, or sub-ordinate Grange programs. It is just this family spirit which has kept Mary very busy with subordinate, Pomona and State Grange activities for many years. And now this month, she has officially been appointed to a National position with the Grange.

At home along Norway Road near Longwood Gardens, Kennett Square, Mary was between trips out of state to gather materials for her new position. The task of serving as National Grange Women's Activity Chairman is a fulltime job, she explained, with some days being extremely hectic and others not so demanding of her time away from her family. Keeping a healthy balance between her Grange duties and her family life has always been upper-most in importance to Mary since her first notion of Grange work when she was dating her husband Bill.

"I was not from a Grange family," she began. "But I soon found out about it when Bill and I were dating!" "I quickly learned that we would not have dates on the second and fourth Wednesdays of each month because that was when the Kennett subordinate Grange met." "Bill was an active member and before long I also joined Kennett Grange 19," she added.

Since that first experience with Grange as a young adult, Mary has continued to take responsibilities in the local, Pomona and State divisions of the organization. With each office, she maintained a balance between family responsibilities and Grange work.

Right after she was taken into the Grange in 1956, she was elected to serve as program coordinator— or lecturer— in 1957. Later she "worked through the chairs" (a term in Grange circles which means taking offices ranging from lesser to increasingly greater responsibilities) until she was elected to serve as subordinate Master (president) for two years. Having served for several years and continuing to serve as Kennett Grange 19 secretary, Mary has also held several positions in Pomona and State Grange including six years as State Lecturer.

No longer eligible for election to this last office, she has been appointed-and after consultation with her family-she has accepted this national Grange position. During the National Grange meeting held last fall in neighboring Lancaster County, Mary, as State Lecturer, found what it is like to serve in the National functions. With her state serving as the host state for the National Grange meeting, the state lecturer had several additional tasks to perform which otherwise would not come a State Lecturer's way.

At the National meeting Mary was singled out by the body as the Outstanding State Lecturer, an honor which pointed to the many successful activities she and her local and Pomona lecturers promoted during her term of office.

Homestead Notes

Having been tapped by the National Grange for her new responsibilities, Mary outlined some of her primary concerns of this office as Women's Activity Chairman.

Her tasks include organizing and executing the National Grange sewing, needlework and stuffed toy contests. The sewing contest is held on the national scale in New York City in June after subordinate and Pomona Grange contests have selected winners who are in turn judged on the State level before going to New York. The Needlework and stuffed toy contests have their National judging done during the National Meeting in November.

A new project this year, Mary explained, is a home decorating contest which may involve something as extensive as a whole room or as individual as a single window treatment.

A second innovation in the Women's Activities is a foods contest sponsored in conjunction with Ocean Spray Cranberries, she added. It is of primary importance in her new role to encourage subordinate, Pomona and State Grange personnel "to have programs and information to educate and enlighten," she explained.

As State Lecturer, she has had a great deal of experience in encouraging and enlightening membership as she worked with others on the State staff conducting regional instructional meetings throughout the state. These meetings hope to reach the local leadership of the Granges to pass on information about programs and to discuss problems and methods. This years, Mary said she had fourteen such regional instructional meetings on her schedule.

In similar manner, Mary will be working with the National officers as they conduct similar instructional meetings, but this time across the nation rather than across the state. In the past, her husband Bill almost always accompanied her on her many appointments away from their home. Now that she will be traveling by plane, she says Bill will still probably try to come along with her. While her expenses will be paid, of course Bill will have to pay his own way, but it is so much a part of their experience to work together in Grange that if scheduling and fieldwork will permit, Bill will accompany Mary.

Bill and Mary have four children. Their oldest daughter, Kathy, married Jim Steele who is from a Grange family as well. Another daughter, Lois, married a non-Granger, but soon took him into the Grange circle. Ginne is a senior in high school and Phillip is a sophomore. The older children watched after the younger ones when Mary had to be away overnight for state functions. Now that the Buffington children are older, Mary and Bill see the possibility of being away for several days at a time attending to national responsibilities.

The grandchildren and children as well are all involved in the many Grange activites. The Grange has programs geared to various age levels whereby all individual members have access to projects and responsibilities in keeping with their interests.

"Bill and I have observed through the years so many examples of personal development of the individual," Mary stated. "In the meetings each one has the opportunity to make comments, to propose action, to make decisions, and become personally involved," she added. "Time and time again we have seen a person grow in confidence as he or she worked through the chairs over a series of ten years to become Master." "The contests all offer opportunities to develop talents, too," she continued. "Music, art and photography are all part of the Lecturer's programs. The sewing, needlework and stuffed toys are under the Women's Activity program," she explained.

The youth programs in the Grange have supported many projects including a recent campaign to assist the deaf on a local as well as national scale. "People are very willing to help others when they see a real need and can help out by collecting labels or donating funds when they can see what they are getting," Mary surmised, from the very successful project at state and national meetings last Fall when chocolate candy Grange emblems were sold as fund raisers.

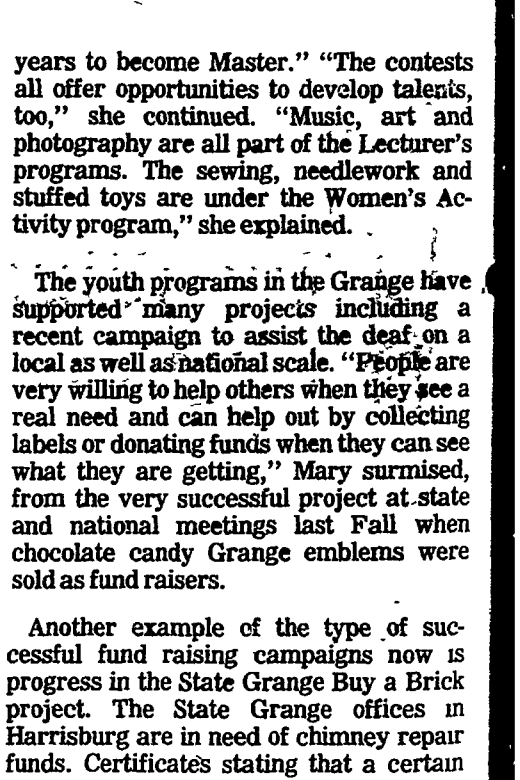
Another example of the type of successful fund raising campaigns now is progress in the State Grange Buy a Brick project. The State Grange offices in Harrisburg are in need of chimney repair funds. Certificates stating that a certain number or Grange group has purchased a brick by donating a dollar per brick is given to the purchaser with official signatures and a brightly colored-in number of bricks on the certificate to validate the transaction.

Pointing out that the Grange is not only a service-oriented group reaching out to others who need assistance, Mary explained that the Grange is and has always been a grassroots pro-agriculture organization. It has such a strong lobbying power, Mary said, because the legislators know it is a grassroots voice.

Mary added that the Grange is really a voice for the consumer, who also has a stake in agriculture in that he, the consumer, needs available produce at an affordable price—a price which will still allow the farmer enough income to stay in business.

Coming from one who knows it well enough, Mary stated that "the Grange is a unique organization." In the Grange as far back as 1867, women could vote in the Grange meetings. "From the very beginning, women had equal rights, an equal role. "In this day and age when that is less astounding than in times past, this fact does not seem so important," she commented. "When women where trying to get to vote in elections, the Grange supported them. The doors are wide open to opportunities for women as well as men," she added.

"Our concern right now is to offer up-to-date information to local members, educating and making available information to make women's busy lives a little easier," she concluded.



Mary is working on a striped poncho. As Women's Activity Chairman for National Grange, she oversees arrangements and promotions for national needlework, sewing and stuffed toy contests.

Mary Buffington places a plate of Kennett Grange 19, her sub-ordinate Grange, on the shelf with other collector plates and trip souvenirs.

Firm offers scholarship

NEWARK, Del. — The Draper-King Cole company in Milton has offered to sponsor a $500 agricultural scholarship at the University of Delaware to be awarded to an incoming freshman interested in majoring in either animal husbandry, soil or plant science.

In announcing the new scholarship, Donald F. Crossan, dean of the College of Agriculture Sciences, noted the importance of agriculture as an industry in Delaware. He expressed appreciation to Harry Bonk, president of Draper-King Cole, Inc., for his generous support of the college's teaching program. "In giving this scholarship," he said, "your company is asking young Delawareans to take advantage of the opportunity to become a part of this valuable sector in the state's economy."

Candidates for the scholarship may be nominated by their high school principal, guidance officer, or science teacher. They may also apply themselves. A letter of application is required. Selection will be based on overall academic merit and achievement in science courses. The scholarship is restricted to Delaware residents. Financial aid will be a secondary consideration.

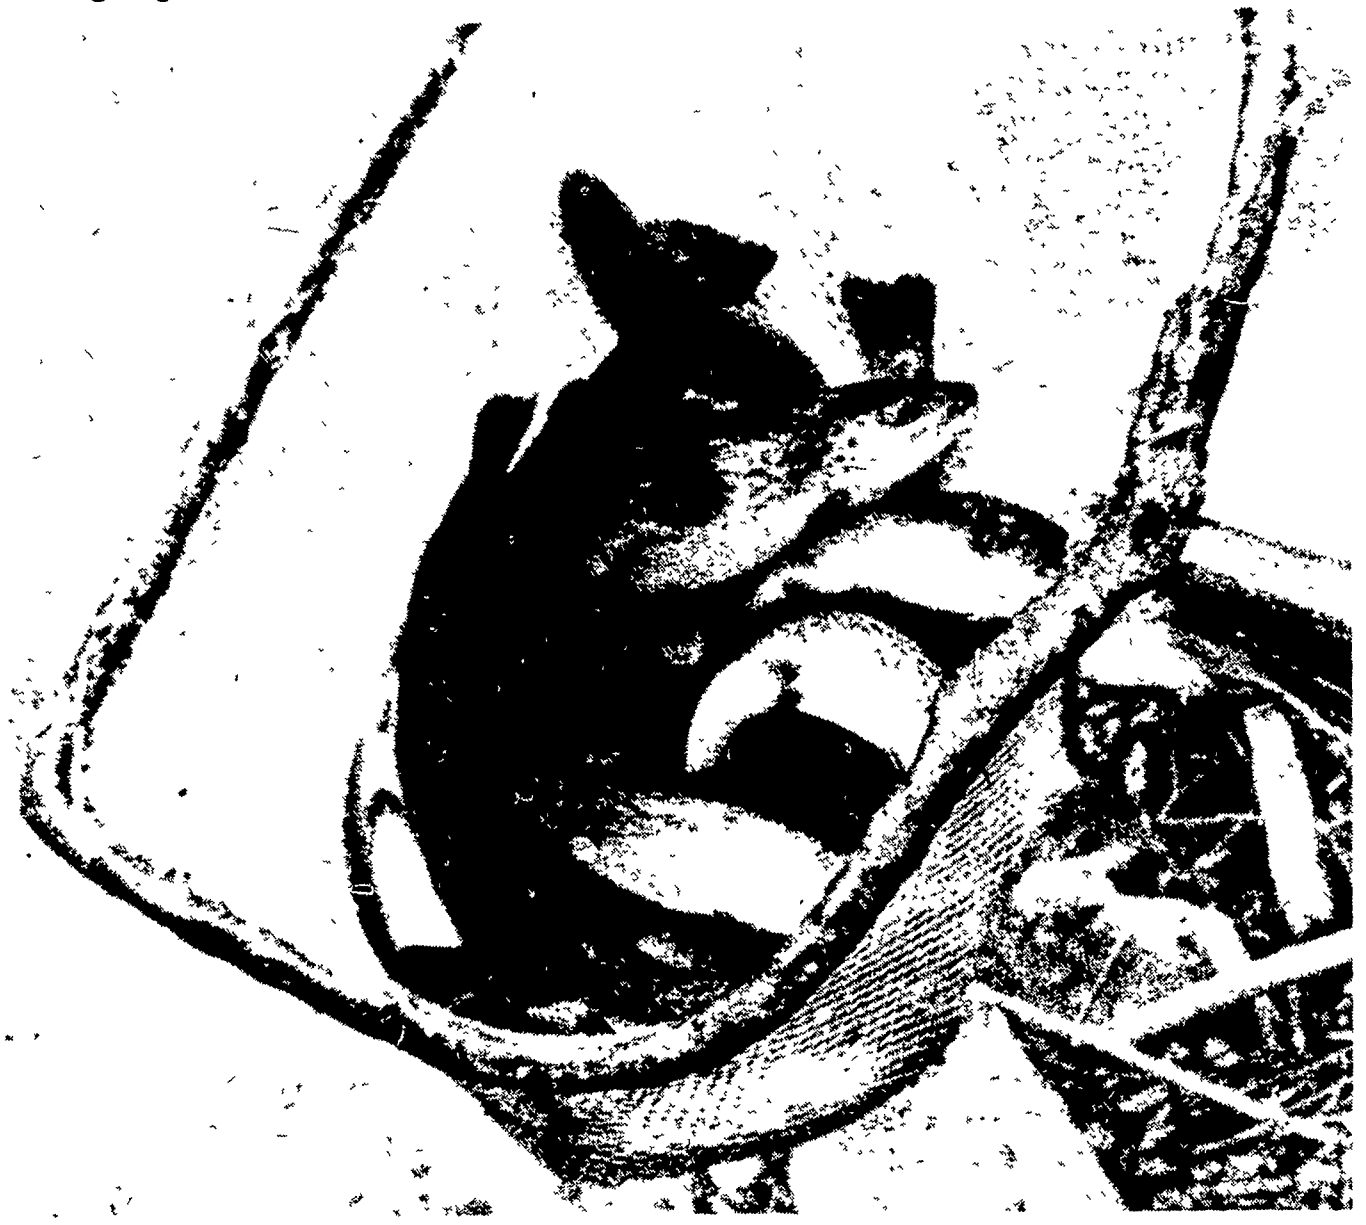
The flavor of fresh trout is catching

Tis the season to catch a trout. And just in case you have a hankering to do just that, we've included a recipe for landing a nice fat one.

If however, you've been doing that nicely for years, we're featuring recipes today to help you enjoy your catch. Whether you like your trout made in the oven or over the grill, we have a recipe for you. And to add to the fun if you're grilling your trout, we've included some go-withs.

But even if the closest you come to a trout is the empty creel your husband toted about all day in seach of a big one, we're here to save the day with our tuna fish casserole.

So why not try some of today's recipes and fish for a few compliments on the results.



This is one of many nets full of trout stocked in Hammer Creek recently. While daily limits do not allow individual fishermen to bring home this quantity of trout, many people will be lucky enough to enjoy the fresh caught flavor of a brook trout this weekend.

RECIPE FOR CATCHING TROUT

1 minnow
1 scissors
1 clear leader with a number 6 or 8 hook split shot
3 quarts of patience

Clip off one of the minnow's fins so he swims off-balance and is more active in the water. Place on the hook.

Order from the end of the line should be: minnow, hook, about a foot of clear leader, 2 or 3 small split shot.

Drop the line in a medium current and allow the current to take the line down stream, preferably under some thick overgrowth. Work up and down the stream trying each spot a number of times. When something tugs, pull with a swift light upward motion on the rod.

BAKED TROUT

4 to 6 fresh trout
lemon juice

Clean and rinse trout well in cold water. Dip in lemon juice.

Place in a greased pan and bake in a hot oven 425° F. for 20 minutes or until fish flakes easily.

Place on warm platter and spread with Blue Devil Butter. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

Blue Devil Butter

6 tablespoons softened margarine
3 tablespoons blue cheese
1 tablespoon anchovie paste
½ teaspoon dry mustard
1 teaspoon white vinegar
1 teaspoon lemon juice

Combine mustard in vinegar and lemon juice. Blend into butter mixture. Serve with Baked Trout. Makes about ½ cup.

Mrs. Carl Bacon, Felton

SAUCEPAN CHEESE SAUCE

In ¼ cup butter or margarine in saucepan, saute ½ cup minced onions until tender-crisp. Add ½ cup undiluted evaporated milk, 2 dashes Tabasco and ½ pound process sharp Cheddar cheese, sliced. Heat, stirring occasionally, until blended. This sauce is delicious with oven baked trout. Makes 2 cups.

PAN-FRIED TROUT

Sprinkle trout with salt and pepper. Dip in flour or corn meal. Pan-fry in hot fat ¼ inch deep over medium heat until golden brown. Turn and brown on the other side. Serve.

TUNA FISH CASSEROLE

1 can tuna, any size
several hard-boiled eggs
1 cup mashed potatoes
1 can cream of celery soup
1 cup bread crumbs
¼ cup vegetable oil

In a bowl, mash the eggs with a fork and add tuna, potatoes and undiluted soup Mix thoroughly. In a separate dish, combine bread crumbs and oil and mix until crumbly. Sprinkle over the tuna mixture. Bake in a 350° F. oven 30 minutes

BACON-GRILLED TROUT

Wrap cleaned trout in bacon. Grill in folding wire broiler over glowing coals, turning. When bacon is done, serve.

MUSHROOMS IN FOIL

Wash 1 pound of mushrooms, sliced or whole. Top with 2 tablespoons of butter. Add some seasoning. Wrap, folding edges of foil under. Place on grill. Cook about 10-15 minutes. Makes 4 servings.

FROZEN VEGETABLES IN FOIL

Place frozen vegetables on foil. Add seasoning and butter. Shape into a flat package with edges of foil tucked under. Cook over glowing coals about 5 minutes longer than the label directs. If the fire gets too hot, move the package to the edge of the grill.

FRENCH BREAD ON THE COALS

Use a long loaf of French bread. Slash diagonally into thick slices cutting almost to the bottom. Spread seasoned butter between the slashes. Prop loaf on 2 empty cans on the grill, and grill until hot and toasted. Or wrap loaf in aluminum foil. Seal loosely, and place on the edge of the coals for a moist texture.

Seasoned Butter

With electric mixer, whip together ¼ pound softened butter and one small onion, minced.

GRILL-BAKED BISCUITS

Using 1 can of refrigerated biscuits, saute biscuits over low coals in butter or margarine in a covered frypan until brown on the bottom. Turn and brown on the top.

FOIL BAKED POTATOES

Scrub baking potatoes and wrap each in a piece of aluminum foil. Throw the wrapped potatoes into the coals. Bake, turning occasionally until done. Test by jabbing through the foil with a fork.

BROILED TROUT

Dip cleaned trout in vegetable oil. Place on a greased pan and broil 2 to 3 inches from the heat for 3 minutes. Turn and broil on the other side. Remove from the oven and pour 2 to 4 tablespoons of chicken broth or bouillon over the fish and return to 450 ° F. oven for 10 minutes. Pour 1 teaspoon lemon juice and ¼ cup melted butter over the fish just before serving.

Beware of home repair frauds

NEWARK, Del. — Have you ever been the victim of a home improvement fraud? If so, you're not alone, says Delaware extension family living agent Pat Wilson. Each year many consumers lost hard-earned dollars to home repair frauds and schemes.

Some common frauds include the following.

Home Insulation – Offers of cheap insulation or promises of large savings on your utility bill may indicate fraud. Be sure you know the work and reputation of anyone who offers to insulate your home. It's easy to be cheated on insulation since there are so many types and thicknesses. Contact your local utility company for assistance in determining your need for insulation.

Before choosing a contractor, get three estimates and ask for names of customers so you can check with them. Be sure to get a written contract that specifies the "R" (measure of insulating capacity) value, types (s) and quantities of insulation, and exact areas to be covered.

When the contractor gets the insulation, be sure to check the packages to see if the materials are fire-retardant or fire-resistant before the material is installed.

Roofing Repair – Rip-off offers of re-roofing are common, especially during warm weather. Avoid allowing a roving handyman to climb onto your house to give you a free estimate. He is likely to come down with a handful of shingles and a report that your roof needs repair. If you do need roof repairs, contact a local roofer who has been recommended by people you trust. Also, do not be taken in by a high-pressure salesman who promises to stop roof leaks by applying just a roof coating.

Home Re-siding – This type of fraud usually advertises a very low price for home re-siding with the provision that you let the company use your home as a "before" and "after" advertisement for re-siding in your community. You are verbally promised a heafy commission for each new customer you find.

What usually happens is that you are asked to make a modest down payment and to sign a permission or confirmation paper giving the right to show your home.

Later, you find that the paper turns out to be a written, binding legal contract for a large sum of money that you may be obligated to pay.

Bait and Switch – Low-cost building or flooring materials are advertised in the local newspaper or on television. When the salesman shows you the low-cost advertised product, he immediatley begins to find fault with the advertised item and tries to talk you into buying a more expensive product Beware of businesses or contractors who use bait-and-switch tactics.

Driveway Resurfacing – Be careful of people who "just happen to be in the area" with just enough materials to do your driveway and offer to do the job at a bargain price. Their materials and workmanship may be either sloppy or totally ineffective and may wash away with the first hard rain or stay sticky for weeks.

Caution! Be suspicious of any stranger who stops at your home and offers an inspection or points out any repair problem. If you feel you need work done, contact an established, local person who can do the job well and still be around if any problems arise

Emma Hoover, Leola

Ladies Have You Heard?

ABOUT LAUNDRY BASICS FOR 100% COTTON CARE

100% cotton has surfaced as the season's favorite fabric in lightweight and feminine dresses, easy-going pants, soft and sporty terries and sturdy jeans. Cotton absorbs moisture and feels cool — something the synthetic fibers cannot do. It is also durable, versatile, launders easily and does not pull or cling.

Adversely, cotton picks up spots and stains because of its absorbency. It has little resiliency or elasticity and wrinkles easily. However, you will find that many cotton garments have been given special treatments including wrinkle resistance, stretchability and soil and stain resistance.

The first step in laundering cottons is to read the care instructions on the label. Then sort items by separating white and colorfast garments from bright and dark shades. Also, separate the heavily soiled from the lightly soiled things and the sturdy cottons from loosely woven knits.

Treat spots and stains prior to laundering. The method will depend on the type of stain. However, many stains can be lifted by moistening the stain and rubbing it with a full strength liquid detergent on the wrong side of the fabric. Allow it to stand for about 15 minutes, rinse, and if stain has not disappeared, treat again.

A regular wash setting can be used for sturdy fabrics. Select the delicate cycle for loosely woven knits. The water temperature used depends on the degree of soil and the color-fastness of the items being laundered. Use the amount of detergent recommended by the brand you prefer to use.

100% cotton can be safely bleached. Chlorine type bleach may be used on white items. An oxygen bleach is safe for colored cottons as well as all fabrics. A fabric softener will help improve the softness and comfort of cotton and also help to reduce wrinkling.

Tumble drying helps to maintain the softness of cotton. When drying, remove cottons while still moist and hang on hangers or lay flat to finish drying. This will help to reduce wrinkling and also the possible shrinkage of cotton knits. Most cottons can be ironed on a high temperature setting. Those treated for wrinkle-resistance may only need touch-up ironing on a medium setting.

TURKEY PLANNED OVERS

If you are having turkey for Easter this year rather than the traditional ham, remember that it can become dull, unappetizing fare when it reaches the leftover stage. Instead of tiring your family of turkey, freeze the leftover meat for delicious dishes later on.

You can prepare tasty casseroles by combining cubed turkey with vegetables, sauce, seasonings, cooked spaghetti, macaroni, noodles or converted rice. Regular rice and potatoes can become mushy after freezing so you may not want to include them in making your planned-over turkey dishes.

Prepare the casserole, cool quickly and place in meal-sized freezing containers or a casserole dish. Cover tightly with moisture-vapor resistant wrap and freeze immediately.

If your family prefers turkey sandwiches and creamed turkey dishes, you can freeze the leftovers in slices and small pieces. If possible, cover the slices with broth or gravy to prevent contact with air. This also lengthens the storage life. Package in air-tight, meal-sized packages or containers and freeze quickly.

Frozen turkey does not improve with age, and it does not retain good eating quality for as long a period as do some other meats. If you plan to freeze some of your leftover turkey, remember this freezing guide — one month for slices or pieces; six months for slices or pieces covered with broth or gravy; and six months for turkey casserole dishes. Don't throw out any turkey you are unable to use in this time period. It will not be spoiled, however, the quality will not be as good as if you had used it in the recommended time.

Enjoy your turkey planned-overs by freezing the meat in any form your family will enjoy, and remember it will be a time-saving dish for you to prepare when you take it from the freezer at a later date.

Apples can do more than keep the doctor away. They can grow in places other fruits can't-even at temperatures of minus 40 F for some varieties. And if stored in very cool places, they will keep for nine months.

Atlantic Assn. board named

Dairy Industry Association to begin new promo campaign

NEW ORLEANS, La. — The 10th annual meeting of United Dairy Industry Association in New Orleans, was the site for an agreement between UDIA and the California Milk Advisory Board to promote the "Real Seal" symbol nationally on natural dairy product containers.

Begun by CMAB in 1976 as a public service to identify prospective dairy product purchases, the "Real Seal" concept was designed to quickly identify real dairy products from their artificial counterparts.

President Glenn H. Lake and executive vice president John W. Sliter signed the agreement for UDIA; CMAB board chairman Louis Calcagno and vice chairman James Van Till signed for the California dairy promotion organization.

UDIA and member organizations will immedia'ely launch a nationwide campaign to sign up processors and handlers to display the "Real Seal" symbol on all packages containing natural dairy products. The only requirement is that the contents meet federal dairy standards for that category.

In addition, UDIA will conduct a nationwide information program in 1980 to help shoppers differentiate easily between authentic dairy foods and ersatz products. Natural dairy product containers will carry the "Real Seal," a symbolic drop of milk containing the word "Real".

Officers of the Atlantic Dairy Association include: E. Wayne Beshore, New Cumberland, PA; Fred Butler, Inwood, WV; J. Wade Groff, Lancaster, PA; Lester C. Jones, Medford, NJ; Daniel L. Martin, Manheim, PA; Walter A. Martz, Frederick, MD.

Also, Robert McSparren, Peach Bottom, PA; Byron J. Meredith, Jr., Springfield, VA; Albert Moyer, Lebanon, PA; Ivo V. Otto, Jr., Carlisle, PA; Lyle C. Tabb, Kearneysville, WV; David Weitzer, Poolesville, MD; Herbert Weitzer, Poolesville, MD; Herbert W. Wessel, Jr., Hampstead, MD; and Ward L. Zigler, Charles Town, WV.

More than 700 dairy leaders and guests attended UDIA's 10th annual meeting the theme of which was "Decade of Decision." Guest speakers explored the future, and officers and staff explained UDIA's total promotion program at the general session and seminar meetings.

UDIA's total promotion program includes the advertising and marketing services of American Dairy Association, the product and process research and development projects of Dairy Research Inc. and the nutrition research and nutrition education programs of National Dairy Council.

Elections were held at the annual meetings of the corporations: UDIA, ADA, DRINC and NDC. Seven caucus groups met and elected the 25-person board of directors. Each organization's officers are elected by its board of directors. As delegate seating is based upon member organization investment in UDIA's total promotion program, the 182 members of the House of Delegates (an increase of 14 over 1979) coincide with the increased 1979 total unified budget of $40.5 million

• The House of Delegates also approved a board of directors recommendation that dairy food publicly identify and recommend the entire family of fluid milk products.

• DRINC's first joint venture project, freeze concentration of whey versus the current heat evaporation method, was approved. Joint venture is a means for financing major research and development projects, new products or new processes.

• The NDC board of directors voted to sponsor the Grace A. Goldsmith Lecture Award, to be presented annually by the American College of Nutrition "to recognize work in aspects of nutrition with relevance to health care."

Recognized as one of the world's most distinguished and well-known women in medicine and nutrition, Dr. Goldsmith was Dean of the School of Public Health and Tropical Medicine at Tulane University from 1967 until her death in 1975 at the age of 71.

Idea exchange seminars were conducted by staff members to familiarize delegates, dairy leaders and guests with UDIA's total promotion program.

The Leadership Awards luncheon was chaired by James P. Camerlo, Jr. He presented plaques to 28 dairy industry leaders who launched UDIA 10 years ago.

This leadership group included Glenn H. Lake, who has served as UDIA's president since the organization's founding in 1970. Service pins have been presented to 71 persons listed in the awards program representing 665 years of service to the dairy industry.

YOU'VE HEARD THE TALK.

There's a better way to dry grain. It's called CHILLCURING™ because it means CURING without heat. Here's what the talk is all about.

THE GRAIN

Every kernel of grain is alive when it comes out of the field It is a seed, able to grow because it has the ability to take on moisture Likewise, it can be kept in a state of preservation by removing the moisture already in it

But by heating the grain to dry it, the seed life is destroyed

By removing heat and moisture from the grain, it becomes dormant, and stays alive Then it can ripen to full weight, losing only water while keeping valuable protein, starches and sugar

THE SYSTEM

It's simple Grain goes from the field right to the bin With the unique AIRFRAME ˚ and AIRFLOOR ˚ the grain rests on a solid bed that allows maximum ventilation

Clean dry air is the best curing medium for the grain GRAINLAMPS ˚ provide electric sunshine, cleaning and drying the air beneath the floor, before it passes through the grain

Fans force air under the floor Rising through the grain this dry outside air carries away moisture and heat

At the peak of the bin a jumbo 40" turbine, the WHIRLCOOLER ˚, puts nature to work for you Wind and rising air keeps it turning, venting the system naturally

A special HARVESTAT ˚ Control System monitors the curing process A simple setting controls the GRAINLAMPS ˚ to make use of free, natural air

3. The CHILLCURING ˚ system uses only the electricity to power fans and lights, using about 1½ KW hrs per bushel Compare that cost to other systems that use increasingly expensive fuels to get disappointing results.

On being a farm wife -And other hazards

Joyce Bupp

Emotions will run high this week as farmers and city relatives alike respond to the battle cry of Uncle Sam: "It's time to pay your income taxes!"

While millions take the easiest way out and submit the simple 1040 form, calculation of farm taxes is something of an art unto itself. And to further complicate matters, decisions on what is and what is not deductible seem to change with as much predictability as the wind.

This year's version of the Internal Revenue Service game rules and regulations offer a brand new hair-raising goodie for farmers, something labeled by our farm accounting service as the "alternate income tax."

It sounds innocent enough, and is truly an alternate. If the total farm income reaches a certain level, what was previously non-taxable, suddenly becomes taxable. Some alternate, huh?

Mostly, the ruling affects farms with earnings from capital gains on the sale of some farm asset, like dairy cows for instance. Farmers could once balance the gains from the sale of cattle against the investment credit. But now, if the farm income reaches a determined level, the tax must be figured in two different ways, hence the "alternate" label.

And here's the clinker: you must pay the HIGHEST amount of tax from two ways of figuring the same income. My blood boils every time I even think of it.

In all fairness, I think I'd like to have an alternate place to send my tax check - like to my favorite church or charity. If they can have an alternate, then why can't I?

Lime important for vegetable growers

UNIVERSITY PARK — Recent research has shown that the proper use of lime can play a vital part in helping vegetable growers gain much higher efficiency by lowering production costs.

Lime can play a significant role in reducing the plant uptake of toxic elements, improving yields and increasing nutrient uptake and levels

Lime supplies or makes available several important plant nutrients including phosphorus, calcium, and magnesium. Lime also depresses the uptake of several elements including manganese, zinc, and potassium.

Avoiding manganese toxicity is one of the main benefits of liming. Some crops such as red beet make very poor growth on highly acid soils, likely as a result of toxicity related to the excessive uptake of manganese. Reduction in leaf zinc by liming may not be desirable but this is usually offset in producing vegetables by applying fertilizers containing ammonium-nitrogen which enhances the uptake of zinc and prevents a deficiency.

Research results have also provided some interesting information on the role that liming plays in controlling nutrient supplies when compared to fertilizer application. In studies with the four most important vegetable crops, sweet corn, snap bean, tomato, and cabbage, when the best lime treatment and the best fertilizer treatment were compared, the lime treatment had nearly as great an effect as the fertilizer treatment in increasing total yields.

A good liming program can be responsible for nearly one-half of the potential yield increase from lime and fertilizer additions. In considering other production costs, lime is thus still a very good value.

Whether lime supplied adequate quantities of calcium and magnesium depended on the type applied. While all three lime types studied had similar effects in raising soil pH, the calcitic and calcitic with 3 percent Mg types increased the percent saturation of calcium substantially, but caused only moderate increases in percent saturation of magnesium. The dolomitic type, however, raised calcium saturation to 58 percent but increased magnesium saturation to 24 percent, which was 6-fold that of the unlimed check.

A good compromise between the calcitic and dolomitic types could be a calcitic type with 3-5 percent magnesium which would supply reasonable quantities of both calcium and magensium. In fact, the calcitic with 3 percent Mg lime resulted in as high or in some cases higher yields as when the dolomitic type was applied even though the soil magnesium was only 3.9 percent saturation before liming.

Contrary to what has been believed, these studies have shown that finely-ground limestone will increase plant nutrient supplies quickly. For example, in one snap bean experiment, calcitic lime applied at 4 T/A increased leaf calcium by 28 percent just 45 days after being applied while a comparable application of dolomitic lime increased leaf magnesium by 65 percent. This demonstrates that dolomitic lime can supply magnesium rapidly enough to remedy most deficiency problems and that it need not be applied in more costly fertilizer. It also shows that it is practical to apply lime on rented land.

Battling bugs with love trap

REHOVOT, Israel — Israeli scientists here are successfully controlling fruit pests and other insects by trapping them with the aromatic allure of female bugs.

In an effort to eliminate the use of chemical pesticides, researchers with a new slant on romance have transfered the war against crop-devouring pests to the boudoir.

This modern version of the Samson and Delilah story has its origin in the pheromone, an odorous chemical compound secreted by insects to communicate with one another. Each pheromone carries a different message including danger and . . . the invitation to mate.

Moshe Sternlicht of the Institute of Plant Protection at Israel's Agriculture Research Organization is one of the country's leading researchers in the exploitation of pheromones.

The technique, pioneered in Germany and the United States, is a simple one, he says. During the mating season, male insects are attracted by pheromones emitted by the females. This means that the bug population is concentrated in specific locations during a specific time for the purpose of reproduction.

Exterminating them at the right time and place or even simply disrupting the reproductive process would enable farmers to reduce crop destruction significantly.

The trick, then, is to find a way to exploit the mating process and the answer lies in the pheromone which triggers the cycle of reproduction.

The technique is based on the identification, isolation and, if possible, the snythetic reproduction of the pheromone. This work is done by chemical researchers and each insect is a story unto itself.

Once the pheromone has been isolated, it can be used in a number of different ways.

The most common is monitoring. The pheromone is fastened to a crop along with a gluey transparent panel. The unsuspecting male is attracted by the scent and trapped - but not in the snares of love.

The farmer counts the number of males caught per week and, by keeping a record over a period of time, can estimate exactly when the bug population in his fields is at its peak.

Then - and only then - he sprays the crop, guaranteeing minimum use of chemical insecticides with maximum efficiency.

This technique is based on random plantings of the pheromone in order to get a reliable reading of the insect population. But Sternlicht says when large numbers of pheromone-emitting dispensers are scattered all over the orchard, the entire male population can be trapped and exterminated, without the need to spray them at all.

Another technique which is now being put into practice is confusion. This is an instance of the male having it too good. The pheromone is emitted from a vast number of special dispensers located all over the field. The male insect zeros in on one source of the smell. . . then another . . . then another, and soon becomes so confused about the whereabouts of its would-be mate that it gives up.

An even more devious technique is sterilization. As the male insect approaches the pheromone, it brushes past a substance which renders it sterile.

The other side of this coin is the development of anti-pheromones, wherein the pheromone substance is modified to produce a compound inhibiting the attractive power of the natural pheromones being diffused by the actual females in the field.

The last two methods are still in the early experimental stages.

Not only do they destroy bugs but they also eliminate or drastically reduce the need for chemical sprays, with all their negative side effects. In recent years, scientists say, the nations of the world spend more than $2.5 billion annually on two million tons of pesticides.

The effectiveness of these methods depends on efficient means for distributing the pheromone and trapping the insects. Sternlicht has devoted much time to this problem; recently he developed a new dispenser which allows for the uniform emission of the pheromone for up to four months and does away with the adhesive plate, which needed frequent replacement.

The insects are attracted to a funnel-like object and they slide down into a plastic bag which can accommodate a far larger number of insects than could earlier devices. The farmer has to replace the traps only once every four months, thereby saving valuable work hours.

A different type of dispenser is being developed for the confusion technique. One such device involves the use of hollow fibers, tiny hollow plastic tubes filled with pheromone and sprayed on the leaves of the crops.

So the war against pests continues and to those bug lovers who might protest at the underhanded methods being developed, Sternlicht and his colleagues can only say, "All's fair in love and war."

Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

For some reason, I've been interested in geneaolgy and old records for a long time. I'm beginning to think that I inherited the tendency toward a great interest in ancestors and history.

While we sort through old papers in my mother's attic, we come across records of family members who lived two and three generations before us and beside each birthday is listed the sign under which they were born-Gemini, Leo, Libra, etc. There are wills and very old deeds written in 1769. It is fascinating to read them and see which nephew was not included in dividing an estate. One wonders what he did to be excluded!

I had a great uncle whose last name was Sheibly. However, I notice that the spelling was changed over the years. It started out as Scheively, then Sheibley and finally to the present spelling.

Another thing that bothered me a bit was the fact that though the women signed the deeds transferring a farm to a son, someone else did the actual signing while they merely made their mark-an "X". Apparently, it wasn't important for girls to have even enough education to be able to sign their own names in the 1700s. Maybe there was no school where they could be taught, but then how did the men learn?

One old paper which I've had for a while (as I bought some of my uncle's scrapbooks at his sale ten years ago) tells of an agreement between his grandfather and some neighbors, including John Weidler who formerly lived on our farm, spelling out exactly how high "the water on the Conestoga may be dammed up by the grist, merchant and saw mill near their plantations."

It mentions where each iron pin is fixed in a sloping rock and how many inches from the center it may raise when the dam is exactly full. It states where the pins are in relation to my present dwelling house.

And to top off the unusual appeal of this agreement dated in 1861, is the fact that it was written and sealed by my great, great grandfather Henry Shreiner who was a justice of the peace for 43 years and a surveyor for 61 years. He was also a teacher and a farmer in Manheim Township.

Stretch your budget with your eyes

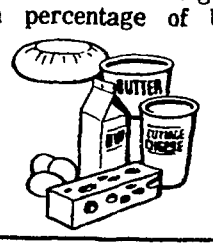
YORK — If you are trying to keep the family budget in the black and still serve healthy, nutritious meals to your family, you should be aware of the labels on the foods you buy.

Nutrition information labels are required by law on all foods which have nutrients added or which make a nutritional claim on the label or in their advertisements, says Marcell Seckman, home economist

Currently, nutrition labeling on all other foods is voluntary. But consumer demand and competition have encouraged the labeling of most foods regardless of regulatory law.

This nutrition information is a simple listing of the nutritive values in an average serving. The number of servings in a package is also listed.

Nutritive values are given as a percentage of U.S. Recommended Dietary Allowance for that nutrient. RDA's are standards that serve as goals for good nutrition and are established by the Food and Nutrition Board of the National Academy of Science/National Research Council. They are based on existing knowledge of nutrients judged to be adequate to meet the known nutritional needs of practically all healthy persons.



Nutrition information labels must give the percentage of U.S. RDA's for protein, five vitamins - A, C, thiamine, riboflavin and niacin - and two minerals, calcium and iron.

Except for foods aimed at a particular group such as babies, RDA's are calculated for adult males whose requirements are usually greatest. Women, of course, need greater amounts of iron, so that RDA for iron is based on their needs.

Other information on the label, all based on a single serving, includes the number of calories and the grams of protein, carbohydrates and fat

You will also notice an expiration date, called open dating, stamped or printed on many food containers This is because some foods are perishable due to light, heat, oxidation, storage or transportation.

Read and compare labels along with unit costs to make the best food decisions.

IT'S A FACT...

Research shows daughters of high PD bulls give more milk than those from bulls with an average PD. I can provide service to over 50 dairy bulls with proofs over +1,000 PDM. For bulls whose daughters give more milk and have sound type.

Manure handling is the second largest time consuming responsibility that dairymen have. Besides the milking operation, manure handling, storage and land application can present one of the most critical problems that dairymen face in planning a modern dairy facility.

The Surge TRU Solids/Liquid Separating Equipment provides a big step towards total automation of your manure handling. Surge TRU automatically converts raw manure into two valuable easy-to-handle by-products. You get a liquid fertilizer . . . and a low-moisture, near odorless, fiberous material that is being successfully used as bedding or sold as a soil conditioner.

The Surge TRU manure processing unit is unique in that it adopts to most any type of manure handling system and environment. Dairymen everywhere are realizing that their MANURE PROBLEM can be turned into a PROFIT with a Surge TRU system. Besides the many obvious benefits of a TRU system, there are hidden returns of a better managed dairy system and easier and more efficient soil application of manure nutrients.

Md. weed specialist assumes post

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — Betty J. Hughes, a farm-reared native of Felton, Del., will coordinate the weed control aspects of this year's pest management program for the Maryland Extension Service.

The new weed control extension assistant began work in Maryland Monday, April 7. She will report directly to Dr. Galen P. Dively, Extension entomology specialist, who has headed the integrated pest management program in Maryland since its inception in 1972.

Miss Hughes will also act as a liason person between county Extension agricultural agents throughout the state and Ronald L. Ritter, extension weed control specialist in the agronomy department at the University of Maryland in College Park.

Her inter-departmental ties represent the evolving nature of integrated pest management into a program which services all types of field crop problems, Dr. Dively commented.

Originally an insect scouting activity in sweet corn fields on Maryland's Eastern Shore, the pest control program now operates statewide. Its Eastern Shore emphasis has shifted to soybeans and small grains in cooperation with the University of Delaware.

West of the Chesapeake Bay, the emphasis is on corn and alfalfa. This phase of the program is supervised by J. Lee Hellman, extension field crop entomology specialist at the University of Maryland.

The field corn program offers early-season insect and weed scouting service. In alfalfa fields, the program provides full-season insect scouting for leafhoppers and alfalfa weevils.

Since weeds are the biggest concern for most corn growers, Miss Hughes will devote much of her time to this crop, Dively reported.

A twofold approach is planned, as follows:

Early-season scouting to make recommendations for post-emergent weed control;

Weed mapping in the fall to furnish strategy for tailormade recommendations next year on participating farms.

Dively lamented that, during the past two years, 30 percent of the scouted corn acreage in Maryland had weed problems serious enough for herbicide treatment.

Pro's and con's of organic farming

By ELEANOR BLAKELY
Penn State University

UNIVERSITY PARK – Pick up any magazine at your local news stand, and you'll find some mention of "today's changing culture." Many Americans are said to be resisting the establishment.

Indeed, many people are turning back in time to rediscover a simpler, less stressful, and more basic lifestyle.

Many Americans, young and old, are seeking a closer harmony with a "natural," chemical-free environment. One channel that many use to demonstrate their new rebellion is through an invigorating interest in organic foods.

Their purpose seems to be to return to the lifestyle Mother Nature intended for us to follow.

The new interest in organic gardening is a reaction to the exposes of the deleterious effects of pesticides on animal life and the ecosystem. The possible damage to babies from high amounts of nitrate in food is another real, and emotional, issue that is linked to agricultural practices.

All chemical food additives are shunned because certain ones have been found to be hazardous to human health and have been banned by the government.

But what is this "organic food cult?" Just because a food is labeled "natural," should we buy it for our families because we believe it is more nutritious?

How does it differ from the food we traditionally see on our dinner table?

What is "organic" food?

Technically speaking, all food is organic since it is derived from living organisms.

"Organic" is a branch of chemistry dealing with carbon-based molecules that are synthesized by living things. All foods in nature contain carbon — this, all are organic. Nutrients such as carbohydrate, protein, fat, and vitamins are all composed of carbon-containing molecules without chemical fertilizer;

More descriptive terms referring to the foods that organic enthusiasts consume are "organically-grown," or "organically-processed." They refer to products obtained.

without fumigants, fungicides, or herbicides, without pesticides applied for insect control;

without preservatives, coloring agents, or any synthetic food additive; fertilized only with organic matter (non-manufactured) and natural rock minerals.

Cattle, sheep, pigs, and poultry must be grazed on organically-grown pasture or fed organically-grown feed. Animals grown for meat must not be treated with antibiotics, hormones, or vaccines.

Acceptable organic fertilizers include dried cow manure, compost, limestone, sulfur, ground granite rock, and rock phosphate.

Any or all may be used, since no legal definition of "an organic fertilizer" exists; and only recently has a government agency begun to discuss the term's usage on food labels.

Consumer attitudes

A 1978 survey showed that 61 percent of the public believed that natural foods were better for you — this number was up by 19 percent from 1974. Twenty-eight percent said these foods were "different," but did not claim that "natural" meant more nutritious.

The belief in the benefits of a natural diet has spread nationwide. When asked what foods were natural, only products like fresh orange juice, fresh green beans, and mushrooms were strongly agreed on as being natural foods.

Although no change of state would have occurred, frozen orange juice and frozen beans were definitely off the "natural" list. Two-thirds of those interviewed felt that pasteurization, homogenization, and vitamin additives made milk, a product traditionally believed to be "the natural food," ineligible.

The organic food movement has become "big business" and is being viewed with a wary eye. Some experts say it is leading people to distrust the nation's food supply. Others say the movement is useful and has helped to increase public awareness of chemicals that have become regular ingredients of processed foods. The public has begun to read food labels.

A farm magazine has published articles analyzing the potential for organic farming. They concluded that organic farming is possible on a small scale as long as prices remain high.

But there is no guarantee that the prices of organic foods will remain high. Furthermore, chances are great that the public may lose interest because of high prices and often fraud and misrepresentation

Processed foods are provided for the consumer on the basis of convenience, quality, and sensory appeal. Most processed foods are priced higher than food in the raw state, but many are willing to pay that price in order to have their foods premixed, precut, preseasoned, and precooked.

However, not all processed foods are more expensive. Some are actually more economical to buy already fully prepared than to make them "from scratch."

To lower the high cost of the national food supply, the volume of production must be increased through economics of scale on the farm and large-scale processing plants. Waste is reduced by processing, which increases shelf life. Canned and frozen fruits, processed vegetables out-of-season, and baking mixes are usually less expensive than their fresh or unprocessed counterparts, even if these are available.

The organic food business is a small scale operation due to the constraints imposed by all "all-natural" concept.

Thus costs and prices seem likely to remain quite high People who wonder about the possibility of adapting organic gardening in their own home garden should remember that it has some advantages and many limitations, depending on one's interpretation.

Nutrients in soils

Climate and location where grown, harvest time, storage, handling, variety, and genetic variable are all strong determinants of the food value of plants.

As plants grow, they draw upon the natural resources of the soil and take in nutrients, changing them to a form they can use for growth.

If a soil is deficient in one or more nutrients, the plant cannot grow well, but its content, such as protein, fat, carbohydrate, and vitamins, could be identical to that of a flourishing plant grown in rich soil. A deficient soil will result in lower yield, but the plant will not necessarily be less nutritious.

Scientific evidence shows no difference in nutrient composition between organically-grown produce and that grown under conventional methods using inorganic chemicals.

It is universally accepted that organic materials serving as fertilizers, such as manure, compost, and humus maintain organic matter content in soil. They improve the physical characteristics of soils, such as "tilth" or "looseness" of the soil, and help aerate the ground for good root respiration. They also increase the soil's capacity to hold water and nutrients.

As plants grow and are harvested, they remove a portion of the soil's nutrients. Plants obtain nutrients from the atmosphere, water, and soil. Soils deficient in nutrients do not provide or release them at an adequate rate to allow for efficient plant growth.

So most soils require some type of supplementation: for maximum yield and/or quality what has been removed from the soil by plants must be replenished.

At least 16 chemical elements are essential to plant growth. These are: carbon - sulfur - hydrogen - iron - oxygen - manganese - nitrogen - copper - phosphorus - boron - potassium - zinc - calcium - molybdenum - magnesium - and - chlorine.

Most non-manufactured fertilizers do not provide sufficient amounts of this growth-stimulating nutrient.

Another point of concern with the strict use of only organic fertilizers is that nitrogen becomes available for plants at different rates depending on its source and various other conditions such as weather and temperature.

Urea, a pure organic nitrogen fertilizer, ammonium nitrate which has one half of the nitrogen in organic form, and ammonium sulfate which has all nitrogen in organic form, are much more rapidly available to plants than non-manufactured nitrogen-containing fertilizer.

For instance, in the same period of time, chemical fertilizers release 98 per cent of the nitrogen, while cow manure fertilizers release only 50 per cent.

Nutrients must be in a soluble state in order to be used by plants. The nutrients of most commercial fertilizers are already in the form most available for uptake by the plant. Non-manufactured organic fertilizers must be converted by soil microorganisms into inorganic compounds.

However, some of the nutrients such as nitrogen and heavy metals, can be taken up in organic form. Once these are made available to and absorbed by the plant, their source — whether from animal waste or manufactured fertilizer — cannot be identified.

Is it more nutritious?

How to make beekeeping a profitable farm sideline

NEWARK, Del. — Beekeeping can be a fascinating and profitable sideline for the small farmer or home hobbyist, says Dale Bray, Delaware extension apiculturist.

If you are interested in beekeeping for the honey, for the money, or to pollinate your crops, this is the time of year to get started. If you assemble your supplies now, you'll be ready to go by the time the trees and flowers burst into full bloom.

You'll need about $100 worth of equipment, a suitable location for a hive, and a basic understanding of the habits of honey bees.

Check the telephone book for beekeepers' supplies. You'll need to purchase a hive to house your bees; frames and a foundation to support the honeycombs in which your bees will store their honey and raise their young; a smoker, used to blow smoke into the hive to pacify the bees; a hive tool for opening the hive; a feeder to dispense sugar syrup until the bees can produce their own food; and, of course, a veil and gloves to protect you from stings.

Next you'll need to buy two or three pounds of bees with a queen--she's the one that lays the eggs necessary to keep up the colony's population. Make sure the bees you buy are certified free of bee diseases.

Locate your hive where the bees are unlikely to sting anyone. Expose it to some sun but provide shade during the hot days of summer and protect it from prevailing winds, especially in winter.

Be sure there's a constant supply of fresh, cool water nearby.

Besides water, bees need three basic materials: nectar, pollen, and propolis. Nectar is the basic ingredient of honey, the bees' basic food. Pollen becomes food for the young bees. Bees use propolis to seal cracks and waterproof their hives.

The sugary liquid called nectar comes from flowers. In our area, the best sources of nectar for producing surplus honey are tulip poplar trees, goldenrod, and wild aster.

The color and flavor of honey depends on the kinds of plants from which the bees collect their nectar. Honey can be nearly colorless, amber or reddish, and its flavor can range from mild to strong.

Flowers also provide pollen. An average-size colony of bees uses about 100 pounds of pollen each year, so its' necessary to locate a colony near a good source

Many wildflowers, ornamentals, weeds, shrubs, and trees provide pollen. Asters, corn, dandelions, fruit blossoms, goldenrod, grasses, maples, oaks, poplars and willows are especially good sources of pollen.

Bees collect propolis from the buds of trees.

Worker bees secrete a fluid that hardens into tiny wax scales. They use this wax to build honeycomb. Beekeepers often provide their bees with honeycomb foundations made of sheets of beeswax. This enables bees to speed up comb construction and provides a pattern for building a straight and easy-to-remove honeycomb.

When you're harvesting honey, make sure you leave plenty for the bees. Be sure there are at least 50 pounds of honey in the hive when winter begins, or the bees might starve before spring.

To protect yourself from bee stings, try to work with bees when they are flying actively in favorable weather. Wear protective clothing: veil, gloves, close-woven, light-colored clothing

Most beekeepers eventually develop immunity to stings. However, if you become allergic to bee stings, consult an allergy specialist before you get hooked on beekeeping.

Your county extension agent should be able to supply you with pamphlets about beekeeping. The state beekeepers association would also be happy to share advice post — produce more nutritious food is not true.

Whatever the type of fertilizer, it does not influence the nutrient composition of the plant, or its amount of protein, fat, carbohydrate, or vitamins. These nutrients are determined by the genetic composition of the seed and the maturity of the plant at harvest.

A plant grown in soil deficient in nutrients will simply fail to grow well, may be stunted, and yield poorly. Animals that do not receive essential nutrients from pasture or in the feedlot will also suffer.

The meat of an animal raised on organically grown feed will be identical to that of an animal fed on conventionally grown feed, provided that both animals receive enough feed and it contains all the nutrients essential for growth.

Fertilizers do influence the mineral composition of soils. Trace elements essential for plants such as iron, manganese, copper, and zinc or those non-essential for plants essential for animals such as iodine, cobalt, and selenium may be low, and plants grown on such soils will be deficient when consumed as food or as animal feed.

Lack of these minerals can lead to physiological disorders and problems with growth in animals. Nutrients are not supplied in sufficient amounts by non-manufactured organic materials because of unbalanced composition As plants remove these from the soil, a supplement must be provided in order to replenish the soil's natural mineral composition

Soil improvements will increase the yield and size of the crop, but will not affect major nutritional characteristics (other than mineral content) of the crop grown on it.

For example, it is not possible to raise an apple to have the vitamin C content of an orange by adding ascorbic acid to the soil Studies have shown that manure treatments did not significantly increase ascorbic acid, carotene, iron, or copper in rye or potatoes.

Another study showed that carrots treated with chemical fertilizers did have a higher carotene content than those fertilized with compost, but the difference was attributed to the larger size of the carrots grown in chemically-treated soil. The nitrogen content did increase in soils when manufactured fertilizers were used, and this would account for the high yields that resulted.

Pest control problems

Pests can also be a problem to crops. They can ravage a large-scale commercial crop or a backyard garden. Chemical insecticides, herbicides (weed killers), and fungicides used in commercial production of most food crops in the United States are abhorred by followers of the organic movement.

But pesticides have been proven safe when applied according to the label directions, and residue tolerances set by the Environmental Protection Agency are monitored by the Food and Drug Administration

It is possible to produce crops without the use of pesticides (particularly herbicides), but at a sacrifice in the quality of the product. Objectionable insect damage, insect fragments, and plant diseases are almost uncontrollable. To garden organically and prevent plant diseases the recommendations are simply to follow good crop management practices

Rotation of garden location, altering the site every year if possible for "related" crops, such as tomatoes, potatoes, and eggplant; or cabbage, broccoli, mustard, kale, radishes, and turnips (leafy crops versus root crops).

Use of proper fertilization;

Planning disease-resistant varieties and only healthy plants;

Use of disease-free seed;

Use of proper irrigation

Even by following these good management practices, insect or disease infestation can be expected, and the quality of an insect-free crop is not likely to be achieved. Insects can consume appreciable quantities of food, and therefore, yield will decrease.

This is a severe problem for large-scale production farms. Organic gardening may work when properly done, but organic farming is more risky since the high yields and high market grades cannot be guaranteed.

This problem with decreased yield poses another problem when organic farming is used. Famines are historic facts.

One is reminded of the blight which hit the potato crop in Ireland in the last century when a million people starved and another million emigrated.

Experts have estimated that if pesticide use were prohibited in the United States, crop losses would amount to 50 per cent and food prices would increase four or five times.

An estimated 50 million Americans alone would face starvation if organic gardening was the only agricultural method used.

At present, one per cent of our farms produce 60 per cent of the vegtetables, 45 per cent of the fruits and nuts, and 35 percent of the poultry that is consumed. This is possible only by using scientific methods of farming, and using manufactured fertilizers and pesticides.

The amount and cost of organic fertilizer needed to fertilize large areas of land is prohibitive. Commercial fertilizers provide plant nourishment in a concentrated form, and they are far more uniform in composition than farm manure.

Manure has only one-twentieth of the plant nutrients provided by chemical fertilizers, and has a lower proportion of phosphorus relative to other nutrients, which depending on the crop, can be detrimental to plant growth.

Comparative costs show that a pound of nitrogen is provided by garbage compost at about $12 per pound, by dried manure at about $5 per pound, and by commercial chemical fertilizer at about 7.5 to 15 cents per pound. The reason for the high cost-of organic foods is obvious

Special problems must be anticipated when using organic fertilizers. While organic foods may contain chemical pollutants, biologically speaking they may be the most contaminated of all

Organic fertilizers of animal or human orgin are likely to contain gastrointestinal parasites and disease-causing bacteria and viruses.

Organic produce is more likely to be contaminated with these, and is no less likely to be free of contamination by filth, mold, natural toxins, or even heavy metals such as lead, cadmium, and mercury, than is food grown with manufacutred fertilizers.

Levels of toxic materials in organic waste should be measured, but this is rarely done. The use of sewage sludge, in particular, requires knowledge of its heavy metals content and the soil it is applied to, but few organic enthusiasts realize the possibility of such contamination.

Apart from health issues, one attribute organic enthusiasts claim for natural foods is that they taste better than what's available at the supermarket. Personal taste preferences determine the choice.

Organic foods may have desirable characteristcs not always found at the supermarket, and some may be more flavorful and fresher depending on the speed of marketing. However, an increase in vitamins and minerals is not likely to be one of these characteristics.

Higher costs of organic

It is up to the consumer to decide if the higher cost of organically-grown produce is worth the possibility of finding fresher flavor. However, all natural foods are not more expensive than regular supermarket items. A USDA market basket survey in 1971 found that a collection of 29 standard foods cost $11 in a supermarket, while their organic-label counterparts purchased in the supermarket's organic section cost $20.30.

In 1971 the organic food movement was barely starting; a more recent survey (May 1979) shows that prices can be quite variable.

No laboratory test exists to prove if a vegetable has been fertilized organically or with manufactured fertilizers. Occasonally, checks are made of products labeled "organically-grown" to analyze for pesticide residues, and occasionally some residues are found, which may be the result of accidental contamination, but all that is labeled "organic" may not actually be so. Putting on fertilizer one year and nothing the next is not "organic" production.

Consumer's choice

The consumer's choice of whether to "go organic" depends on a wide variety of factors, including taste preference and economics — but concern over the nutritional content of fresh produce is not a justifiable claim for choosing organic.

Paying a higher price for organic foods may be all right for families who can afford it, but not if it leaves the food budget so strained that other necessary foods for a nutritionally balanced diet are crowded out. Freshness of organic produce is not always gauranteed if it has to be shipped long distances

The answer to the controversy between the two schools of thought may be to combine them. Use the method most applicable to a given situation, and make sure that neither bad environmental effects nor food shortages occur.

For some people, tilling your own garden is an experience whose therapeutic value is immeasurable. For these, organic gardening is a very practical approach and a resourceful way of regulating the organic material in the soil.

But if everyone decided to "go organic," there would not be enough manure available for an "all-organic" agriculture, and if there were it would be extremely expensive to handle and distribute it. Both methods have merit when properly and timely applied — so why not combine the two and enjoy the best of both worlds?

Swift meat company fined $2500 by USDA

CHICAGO, Il. — Swift and Co., a nationwide meat packing firm headquartered in Chicago, has been fined $2500 by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and ordered to stop violating deceptive practice provisions of the Packers and Stockyards Act, USDA announced.

The firm consented to the order, waived oral hearing and neither admitted nor denied the charges in an administrative complaint filed by the USDA.

USDA charged the firm under the P&S Act with selling meat to the Harris County Texas jail and rehabilitation center at false weights by changing the weight marked on the containers of meat and then preparing false invoices and collecting payment on the basis of the false weights.

USDA ordered Swift to stop selling meat at falsely increased weights; labeling containers or altering weight labels on containers to reflect falsely increased weights, and issuing sales invoices showing falsely increased weights.

The P&S Act, a fair trade practices law, promotes and maintains fair and open competition in the buying and selling of livestock, meat and poultry.

Specialist offers advice on Md. fruit plantings

COLLEGE PARK, Md. — If you've got the fever to plant fruit trees around the farmstead this spring, heed these words of advice from Arthur H. Thompson, horticulture research worker at the University of Maryland in College Park.

Thompson advises against planting apricots, sweet cherries or pears in Maryland home orchards Instead, he suggests apples, peaches and plums.

Apricots are hardy enough to survive in Maryland, but they bloom early and the flowers are often damaged by late-season frosts. Thus, they usually will not bear a good crop of fruit.

Sweet cherries, also, are often harmed by late-season spring frosts in Maryland. And when the fruit is near maturity, it is frequently subject to cracking. Birds love cherries; they can devour an entire crop in short order unless precautions are taken, such as covering the trees with netting.

Pears grow well in Maryland, but they are not recommended for most areas of the state because of the devastating bacterial disease, fireblight.

Thompson and other workers at the Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station have been searching for a pear that is both high in quality and resistant to disease The Magness pear was introduced by the U S Department of Agriculture in 1960 to meet these needs But while a good-quality pear, it is not a reliable producer.

Many varieties of apples will do well in Maryland, Thompson notes. He particularly recommends two new varieties—Gala and Spartan.

Originally from New Zealand, the Gala apple appears especially promising in Maryland variety tests. It is available only from Stark Brothers Nurseries of Louisiana, Mo., which holds the U.S. patent rights on this variety

Thompson also recommends some of the old familiar apple varieties, such as Red Delicious, Golden Delicious, Jonathan, Stayman and Rome Beauty for Maryland conditions.

In the home garden, apples with a dwarf or semi-dwarfing rootstock are often desirable, since they take up less space and bear at an earlier age than fullsized trees.

Malling 26 is a dwarfing rootstock which causes the tree to grow only about 40 percent as large as a standard apple tree. A Malling 9 rootstock produces a tree which is even smaller. But a Malling 7 rootstock yields a considerably larger dwarf tree, about half the size of a standard tree.

Remember to plant at least two different varieties of apple for cross-pollination.

Peaches require more care than apples, since they are somewhat more sensitive to insects and disease They need more pruning and thinning than other fruits They bear abundantly, starting as early as the second year after planting

Most peach tree varieties do not require cross-pollination, as apples do.

Thompson recommends several varieties of peaches for the home orchard.

Candor ripens in early July, while Redhaven ripens in late July. Sunhigh is ready to eat in early August, and Redskin follows in late August. Marpride and Marqueen ripen in early September. These latter two peaches were developed by horticulture research workers for the Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station.

Plant three or more of the recommended varieties in your yard this spring, and you could be enjoying fresh peaches all summer long by 1982.

Plums are easier to grow than peaches, mainly because they do not need as much pruning and thinning. The Stanely is a European prune-type plum that does not require cross-pollination from another variety. By contrast, Methley and Santa Rosa are Japanese plums which should be planted together for cross-pollination.

Before planting fruit trees, take a soil test to determine if you need to apply lime or fertilizer. The University of Maryland offers free analysis of soil samples for Maryland residents. You can get a free soil test from your county extension office.

Fruit trees must be sprayed several times each season to assure a blemish-free, bountiful crop For detailed information on spray programs, contact your county extension agricultural science or urban agriculture agent. Ask for a free pamphlet, Sprays for Home Fruit Planting, Bulletin 125.

Sorghum program participants to receive $61 million

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Farmers who compiled with the 1979 sorghum set-aside program will receive around $61 million in deficiency payments from the U.S. Department of Agriculture, Ray Fitzgerald, administrator of USDA's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service said Monday.

The payments will be made by county ASCS offices in early April.

For eligible 1979 sorghum acreage, the deficiency payment rate is 13 cents per bushel, the difference between the $2.34-per-bushel target level and the $2.21 average market price. There will be no corn deficiency payments since the average market price of $2.31 exceeded the corn target level of $2.20 per bushel.

Fitzgerald also announced the final national program acreage for corn at 85.7 million acres and for sorghum at 15.9 million acres. The program allocation factors for each grain is 100 percent.

Eligible sorghum growers who have not signed applications for payment should do so as soon as possible through their local county ASCS offices, Fitzgerald said. Payments cannot be made until applications are signed and approved.

How to keep pork profits

NEWARK, Del. — Rising production costs and lower hog prices have combined to put heavy pressure on profits for pork producers. At times like these, tighter management procedures can help you stay in the black, said University of Delaware extension livestock specialist Dick Fowler.

Feed accounts for 55 to 80 percent of swine production costs. One of the easiest ways to improve feed utilization is to cut waste at the feeder.

Chances are, if the feed trough or cup that the pig puts its nose into is half full, you're letting him waste too much food.

Adjust the feeder to that he must lick the feed from beneath the adjustment plate, instead. Hogs have plenty of time to eat, so let them work for their food, advises Fowler

Allow one feeder space for every four pigs. Balanced rations mean better weight gain. Rations low in calcium, phosphorus and salt produce poor results.

The growing pig requires 0.6 percent calcium, 0.5 percent phosphorus and five pounds of salt per ton of complete ration

Have a feed sample analyzed periodically to be sure it contains the proper amounts of these nutrients

Vitamins stored in the presence of minerals for three months lose some of their potency So use fresh ingredients for farm mixing

. Moldy feeds reduce intake, causing hogs to take longer to reach market weight. If the feed bin hasn't been cleaned recently, if probably needs it now.

Water is a cheap nutrient, so be generous with it. Hogs drink one to two pounds of water for every pound of feed they consume To be sure they get enough, allow one waterer for every 25 pigs.

Proper bedding can reduce the amount of feed required to maintain body temperature. To maximize feed efficiency, provide animals with a bedded, dry, draft-free place. Two open front shelters pulled together with the third side boarded up will give adequate protection for growing feeder pigs, or for brood sows during gestation.

Check weights for your market hogs and sell at the lowest weight that will command top price, advises Fowler.

Cull poor producers.

Old sows should be replaced with gilts. Record group farrowing averages and cull individuals that farrowed fewer pigs then the average of the group they were in Pregnancy test 30 to 45 days after breeding.

The Delaware Extension Service now has two pregnancy testers available for producers to use. Contact your county extension office if you want to use one of these machines

Open sows do not pay; they cost. Identify and cull them

Parasites are profit takers, too. Both internal and external parasites can drain dollars from your pocket Establish a regular deworming program for your sow herd.

Deworm sows before breeding and again prior to farrowing. Use broad spectrum dewormers to control large roundworms, whipworms and lungworms. Use one-day treatments.

To produce worm-free feeder pigs, feed an anthelmintic-antibiotic from 20 to 40 pounds, or use two separate one-day treatments at 25 and 35 pounds.

Use single-day dewormings to treat market pigs soon after their arrival on your farm and again at 75 and 110 pounds.

External parasite problems include mange and lice. Scheduled spraying is often neglected because of pressure from other tasks. But, warns the specialist, itching and restlessness reduce feed efficiency and in severe cases can affect reproductive performance. Mange mites and lice can be eradicated with a regular spray program

Acceptable insecticides do not kill eggs, so at least two treatments at 10-day intervals are necessary Lindane and toxaphene are the most effective insecticides. Do not spray where the floor is used for feeding. And follow label directions.

By tightening herd management in these ways, you can reduce production losses and increase your profit, Fowler said.

National egg outlook topic at Thursday meeting

Cary Bradley

LANCASTER — NEMA's poultry producer conference at Lancaster on April 17 will offer analysis and forecasts on both the white and brown egg market.

According to NEMA's president, Allen Wenger of Rheems the post-Easter market picture will come in for detailed review. John Ricca of Billerica, Massachusetts, vice-president of NEMA will be talking on trends in brown egg territory.

On hand to size up the entire national egg picture will be a top staffer from United States Producers—Cary Bradley, director of statistics and economics for UEP headquartered in Atlanta, Georgia He is also the editor of UEP's weekly newsletter United Voices

A native of Western Pennsylvania, Bradley graduated cum laude in Economics and Business Administration from Muskingum College. His specialties are econometrics and busines operations research. His career has included work as manager of the Missouri Egg Merchandising Council and the development of egg promotion programs.

Jay Irwin, Lancaster County Extension Agent, will moderate the three man panel handling the marketing topic.

Much interest is expected to center on guidance and advice on labor relations problems and wage and hour regulations. This topic will be covered by Attorney George Isaacson, U.E.P.'s labor expert.

Area egg producers will have their first opportunity to meet Richard Koebrick, president and general manager of Egg Clearinghouse, Inc., Koebrick recently assumed his duties with the Dunham, N.H., egg marketing unit.

The conference is scheduled to open at 10 a.m. at the Continental Inn, Route 30, Lancaster. Producers attending will be luncheon guests of NEMA.

Flock owners, who are not now NEMA members, are welcome to request an invitation by calling C A O'Reilly, Secretary of NEMA at 609/443-3490 after 6 p.m.

Four agencies join forces to catch others' violations

NEW YORK, N.Y. — Four Federal agencies concerned with public safety health have announced a new inspection referral program to better coordinate investigations.

The Consumer Product Safety Commission, the Environmental Protection Agency, the Food and Drug Administration, and the Food Safety and Quality Service — members of the Interagency Regulatory Liaison Group — are starting the program next month to effect quicker identification and removal of serious public health hazards.

In the past, whenever one inspector observed a situation which seemed in violation of another agency's rules, the information was passed along to the appropriate agencies for follow-up.

In recent years, the agencies' regional offices independently developed checklists, forms, procedural guidelines and other aids to facilitate such reporting

The new referral program establishes a formal, standardized procedure for reporting observations of suspected violations to the agency responsible Most major industries are visited by inspectors from one or more of the IRLG agencies Examples of businesses that would be affected by the cooperative inspection program include food processing, chemical manufacturing, drug production, and the manufacturing of various consumer goods.

Inspectors from each of the agencies involved will be trained to recognize possible violations of another agency's regulations, however, a determination that a violation exists will be made only by the agency having the legal jurisdiction over the suspected violation, and then only on the basis of the responsible agency's own follow-up investigation.

Inspectors will not be permitted to enter any area of a facility or do anything not ordinarily done in the course of an inspection authorized by statute for their agency Inspectors will report to the appropriate agency only those possible infractions which are in plain view during the course of their regular inspection

Examples of what might be referred are pesticide misuse; foam, scum, or dead aquatic life near a waste discharge; open burning of trash piles, oil or chemical spills; or mislabeling of drugs or toxic substances

The fifth IRLG member, the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, will continue to cooperate with the other agencies on an informal basis for such referrals, but is not joining the initial stages of the more formal program announced March 31st pending clarification of various legal points.

In addition, because of the complexity and scope of its field structure, the Food Safety & Quality Service does not anticipate full implementation of the program until September 1, 1980.

Although public comment need not be solicited about the new inspection referral program, in the interest of open administration of regulatory authorities, the IRLG agencies are encouraging interested persons to submit written comments within 75 days of the new program's publication in the Federal Register March 28

Written comments (preferably with five copies) should be addressed to· Ms Susan Guennette, Executive Assistant, IRLG, Room 303, Washington, D C 20207; phone (202) 643-4350

Clean and green a little greener

HARRISBURG — Pennsylvania's clean and green act which provides special tax incentives for farmers and forestland owners became a little greener when Governor Dick Thornburgh signed House Bill 725.

"Farmers and forestland owners who are participating in the preferential tax assessment program can now transfer their land, or portions of it, without being subject to roll back taxes," says Peter H. B. Norton, extension resource development specialist at Penn State.

"This clarifies the 'roll back tax' issue when farmland or forestland is transferred without resulting in a change in use," Norton adds.

Landowners participating in tax assessment under Act 319 have their land taxed on the basis of its "use value" rather than "market value." When this land or portions of it were sold or otherwise transferred to new ownership, the land was then subject to a "roll back tax" of up to seven years plus six percent per year simple interest.

The roll back tax is the difference between the "use value tax" and what the tax would have been had the land been taxed on the basis of its "market value."

This amendment will remove the possibility of a "roll back tax" being assessed to farmland or forestland that continues in either of these uses after its ownership has changed.

The original language in Act 319 was subject to varied interpretation and resulted in difference in administration.

Be extra cautious when carry bulky, heavy or awkward loads. Use a sturdy step-stool, step-ladder or ladder for climbing, not a chair or other makeshift.

to a Calumet liquid manure spreader with soil injector.

Livestock manure is valuable So it makes sense to keep as much of that value in the ground as possible. A Calumet 2 or 4-shank soil injector does just that. Teamed with a Calumet liquid manure spreader, the injector puts manure as deep as 12 inches. This can help retain four times the nitrogen that's lost with surface application, as well as reduce odors and runoff.

How Johnsongrass came to America and spread

LANCASTER — Farmers have been debating the origin of rhizome Johnsongrass in meetings across Pennsylvania for many years, but few dispute the legendary ability of this yield-robbing weed to make farming a losing proposition when left uncontrolled.

There are many theories as to how Johnsongrass, now rated one of the world's ten worst weed problems, was first introduced to the United States. Some say it was imported from Europe, along with other grasses, by American farmers.

Others believe that a man named James Davis–sent to Turkey by the State Dept.–brought back Swiss watches packed for protection in Johnsongrass seeds. But, nobody knows for sure.

Once here, this noxious weed was spread rapidly through various means. Seedmen regularly sold Johnsongrass seed to farmers who planted it for hay. "Johnsongrass hay" was a staple of cavalry horses during the Civil War who in turn spread the seeds, which were dispersed in the hay, across the country via their digestive tracts.

Additionally, hay was frequently shipped by rail from one encampment to another, and the seeds often escaped from the box cars to infest right-of-ways.

In any case, this tough-to-control perennial has emerged as one of the farmer's most difficult weed menaces. And, according to Sheldon Blank, Technical Supervisor and weed control specialist from Monsanto, this is in large measure attributable to its primary means of reproduction.

"The laterally-growing underground rhizome system of Johnsongrass can produce over 200 feet of new rhizome growth in a single season from one rootstock, and send up shoots continuously if left untreated and undisturbed," Blank explains.

"Johnsongrass competes with planted crops for light, moisture and nutrients. In addition, the rhizomes can act as host to toxic substances and diseases such as maize dwarf mosaic and maize chloratic dwarf, which are common in Johnsongrass-infested corn," he continues.

"These diseases can result in stunted corn plants and dwarfed ears in non-resistant varieties."

Blank says it takes only 21 days for seedling Johnsongrass to develop rhizomes.

"If the infestation is severe enough, rhizome Johnsongrass can overtake a field in as little as three years, possibly costing growers an entire harvest," he contends.

Yield losses of 50 percent or more in heavily-infested fields are not unusual, he states.

On top of its ability to reproduce through an extensive rhizome system, Johnsongrass panicles have also been shown to be prolific seed producers.

"Each panicle is capable of producing as many as 350 seeds," Blank observes. "And, to make matters worse, the seeds can remain viable in the soil for up to 25 years, representing a constant source of reinfestation problems."

While cultural practices such as crop rotation may slow the progression of Johnsongrass in a given field, the weed control specialist notes that the rhizomes are likely to continue flourishing.

"In general, research has shown that chiseling and discing give effective mechanical control of rhizome Johnsongrass because shortened rhizomes dry out and die faster when brought up to the soil surface. This practice, however, can also generate more widespread week infestations by spreading localized infestations over an entire field," he cautions.

In the area of chemical control options, Blank notes that contact herbicides have shown the ability to "burn down" Johnsongrass plants to the soil surface The drawback, he feels, is that the rhizomes can still flourish and send up new shoots in a matter of weeks to produce an equally heavy infestation.

"Most farmer plaqued with Johngrass infestations know that the only way to make their fields productive again is to destroy those underground rhizomes, and that is no easy task," Blank believes.

"For instance, soybean producers and farmers with late-planted corn may find that they have actively-growing Johnsongrass reaching the boot-to-head stage of growth in time to apply Roundup prior to planting in the spring," he continues. "Once applied, the chemical reaches the weed's rhizome system by penetrating leaf and stem surfaces and translocating down into the rhizomes, preventing regrowth from this underground network." A recommended seedling control program should also be employed.

While the origins of Johnsongrass remain something of a mystery, area farmers don't make much of a secret of their desire to eradicate this noxious weed from their acreage. And, with a consistent program of control measures, they may be able to do just that.

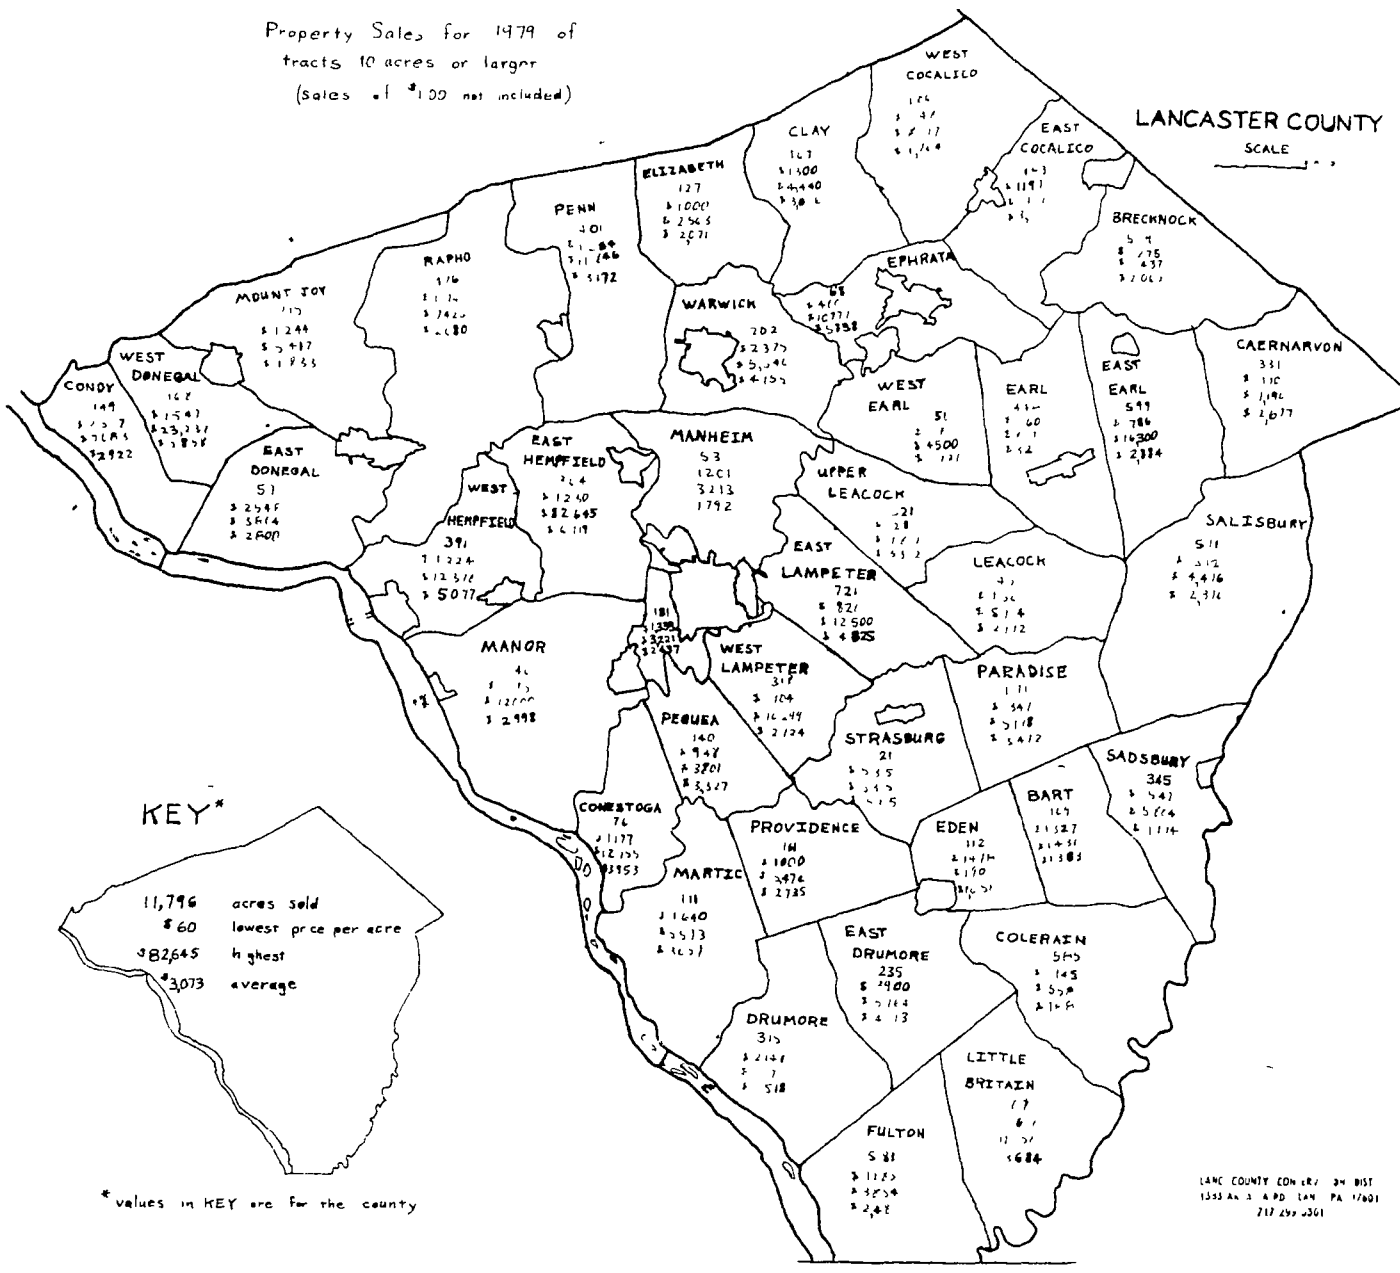
Here's summary of 1979 land transfer figures



The map and figures show value of Lancaster County land transfers of 10 acres or more in 1979. Top figure is the number of acres sold in each township. First dollar figure is the minimum prices paid per acre; second, the maximum; third, the average. It is important to note that of 10,000 transfers in the County, only about 300 were for parcels over 10 acres. Also to be remembered is the fact many of the lower prices are due to family transfers which tend to skew the averages.

Shift in tactics improves odds in war against blackbirds

NEWARK, Del. — The blackbird has a long record as a troublemaker by farmers. Even the Indians had problems with this hungry marauder.

In the prolonged war between man and this particular feathered beast, man has often been the loser. But a shift in battle tactics today has increased the odds in the farmer's favor, says Jack Linehan, a biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service stationed at the University of Delaware's Agricultural Experiment Station in Newark.

A specialist on blackbird behavior as it relates to damage on field corn, he is quite familiar with the problem.

There are two basic kinds of bird predation on corn — sprout pulling (seed eating) and ear damage. Each affects the farmer differently. With seed loss you often have an opportunity to replant — at additional cost, of course. But once the ripening ears are damaged, the farmer has lost at least a part of his crop.

Over the years, any number of farmers with land near the marshes that flank the Delaware River have gone out of business because of repeated blackbird damage. Others have managed to stay in operation by changing the way they farm

Linehan says damage-avoidance methods are by far the most realistic approach in areas with heavy blackbird pressure. Such methods are much more likely to be successful in producing a harvestable crop than an all-out effort at bird control.

Seed eating or sprout pulling, for instance, can be avoided by improving cultural practices. Farmers are most apt to get bird damage to newly planted seed under the following conditions: shallow planting, rather loose soil, rain or moisture at the time of emergence, delayed germination and delayed sprouting due to poor germination and cold soil.

Seed eating can also be discouraged by use of a repellent such as methiocarb.

Unfortunately, some of the best seed treatments can reduce germination. So make sure your corn seed has good viability. Otherwise — especially if the ground is cold when you plant — you're likely to suffer some losses even after treatment. The decision to use a repellent should be based on the anticipated level of bird damage, as well as the cost of seeding.

"If you won't have a chance to replant, you'd be smart to treat," says the biologist.

There are also a number of ways to reduce losses from ear damage on ripening corn.

First, plant a variety that's resistant to damage. If you farm where blackbirds are likely to be a problem, it pays to choose a hybrid with a heavy husk and good tip coverage.

Then grow your crop so that this husk growth is encouraged. This means cutting down the plant population and increasing fertility to get bigger ears, since these tend to be more resistant to damage. Do this in fields with a history of bird damage

Timing is also critical for damage avoidance. Linehan says vulnerable fields should be planted so that corn goes through the milk and dough stages in mid-August. At this time it's least likely to be attacked. Corn which enters these stages earlier or later in the season is very vulnerable.

For the most part, resistant varieties tend to be long-season hybrids. Plantings should go in around the first week of May in Delaware.

For the past six years Linehan has been studying field corn varieties to determine their resistance to bird damage from ear feeding. So far he's rated a total of 265 commercial hybrids grown in plots in Delaware and southern New Jersey.

Results range from nearly zero to six percent injury among the most resistant varieties, to 40 or 50 times that much among the most susceptible.

Among those varieties which performed best were: Taylor Evans Silagemaster, Agway 840X, PAG SX39, Gutwein 92, Todd M90, Agway 834X, Midstates 747A, McNair X212, Midstates 900, Midstates 869, Taylor Evans E20YA, Todd M88, Doebler 70X, Northrup King PX77, Hardy 600X, Pioneer 3369A, Midstates 879, USS 1010, and Midstates 816.

Of course, bird resistance is only one of many factors to be considered in the selection of a corn hybrid. But it's one to think about if bird damage is a problem on your farm.

Besides altering cultural practices and selecting resistant hybrids, there are other ways to protect a maturing corn crop. One of these is through scare devices. The most commonly used are exploders that work off carbide or bottled gas. These are rather expensive to use, require considerable maintenance and can damage the operator's hearing if they go off while he is up close without ear protection.

Their effect also diminishes with distance. But in spite of these drawbacks, they do minimize damage.

"There are many, many corn crops in the Delaware Valley which wouldn't have been worth harvesting at all if it weren't for such devices," says the biologist.

Another way to protect your maturing crop is through chemical behavior control, using a material called Avitrol. This is applied to cracked corn and then scattered by air as a bait in ripening corn.

Its effectiveness as a repellent is based on the social nature of blackbirds. When one eats a piece of the treated corn his erratic behavior and distress calls tend to frighten away other members of the flock.

Linehan was one of the scientists involved in research which led to extending clearance of this material for use on sweet corn a few years ago

He says in some cases Avitrol has proven quite effective, but it's not guaranteed to work. It's also toxic and should be considered as a poison. Directions for its use are very specific and must be followed to the letter, as it is capable of killing other wildlife.

Incidentally, the biologist says there used to be a lot of sweet corn grown in Delaware for processing. Heavy bird damage is one reason this crop has gone out. In fact, U.S. 13 used to be the dividing line when processors were awarding contracts to sweet corn growers, because the closer you get to the river, the greater the bird pressure.

Soybeans aren't nearly as vulnerable to bird predation as sweet or field corn, so to avoid loss a number of farmers have switched to this crop in recent years.

This is one way around the problem, but it does mean the birds have deprived the grower of one of his options as a farmer. This loss of options can cost dearly in a year when corn brings a better return than beans

Linehan said he feels that bird pressure has remained fairly constant in Delaware over the years he's been here. But the amount of damage is down — primarily because growers in the "bird belt" along the river have switched to other crops.

Redwing blackbirds are the main cause of damage to maturing corn in this region Grackles (or "crow blackbirds") do the most damage to seed. Cowbirds tend to associate with the other two species but damage sorghum, not corn. Most people lump all three under the category of "blackbirds."

Population estimates are often based on the highest number present in a single day. The peak usually occurs during either the fall or spring migration. Nearly all the East Coast blackbird population passes through Delaware then.

Blackbirds

Two years ago the count set a record for the lower Delaware Valley — 300 million birds on a single day during the spring migration.

Last year the peak occurred around the first of December.

The summertime population of blackbirds is hard to estimate because they're so dispersed. But compared to the winter, the number is quite low — somewhere around five million.

As a scientist who's devoted a lifetime to trying to bridge the gap between agriculture and biology — the needs of the farmer and the realities of nature — Linehan looks at the blackbird in two ways.

First, there's the damage done to crops and the economic loss this brings.

"I feel the problem is very real. Some growers have been terribly hurt," he says

At the same time, he's aware of another dimension to the problem — the impact on all of us of the presence of such a highly mobile vertebrate population.

"We've already lost this in the buffalo, the passenger pigeon, and many of the species in Africa," he says. "And I'm convinced that those of us now living will be the last to witness this phenomenon — whether or not we do anything deliberately to destroy or control it. What we're doing now by way of control of the blackbird is only speeding up an inevitable process."

Twenty-five years ago farmers on both sides of the Delaware River were all in favor of an all-out war against the blackbird as a crop pest. Some still see extermination as the only solution. But aside from the ethics involved in deliberately wiping out an entire vertebrate population, there's the question of the feasibility of doing so.

When he first came to Delaware in the mid 1950's, Linehan's efforts were aimed primarily at control of the corn-feeding redwing blackbirds, grackles and cowbirds causing farmers so much grief. His observations since then have led him to consider massive control both a costly and futile effort.

Instead, he has come to believe that damage-avoidance methods such as those described earlier are much more likely to be successful in producing a harvestable corn crop where bird predation is a problem

He feels research into bird behavior, as well as research on the crop grown — especially plant breeding for resistance — will allow us to produce corn in spite of the blackbird.

To him, the ideal solution is to use modified cultural practices and plant breeding, together with selective controls, in order to produce a crop without having to resort to massive control efforts against this crop pest.

Expanded protein testing approved for wheat

WASHINGTON, D.C. — A U S. Department of Agriculture official said today that USDA will adopt a rule May 1 which will extend permissive official testing for protein to all classes of wheat except for mixed and unclassed

Leland E Bartelt, administrator of USDA's Federal Grain Inspection Service, said all official agencies, unless exempted, will be required to provide official testing for protein upon request

Only official agencies designated to provide services at interior locations are eligible to apply for an exemption. To a large degree, such exemptions will be based on the volume of wheat inspected by an agency

Requests for exemptions must be submitted to FGIS in writing by April 10

"Official protein testing will be provided strictly on a request basis under the U.S. Grain Standards Act," Bartelt said. "Wheat buyers and sellers, both in interstate and foreign commerce, are entirely free to choose whether or not to use official protein testing services."

FGIS has been providing official protein testing services upon request for hard red winter and hard red spring wheats at export elevators since May 1978.

"We expect requests for the service to increase when testing is available at all specified service points, and is extended to soft red winter, durum and white wheats," Bartelt said

For domestic lots of wheat, including inbound lots at export port locations, official agencies will be authorized to use any FGIS-approved protein testing method. For export lots of wheat shipped from export port locations, only an FGIS-approved near-infrared reflectance machine may be used.

Bartelt said the near-infrared reflectance machine is the only method currently available that is capable of providing the rapid and accurate results needed.

"Since loading at export port locations is conducted on a sublot basis, prompt testing results are extremely critical," Bartelt said.

Marketing wheat on the basis of protein content has become increasingly important since protein content has been proven to be a reliable indicator of wheat quality for milling purposes, Bartlet said.

Notice of the expansion of the protein testing service was published in the April 1 Federal Register.

Chuckwagon Gang rides the Gospel trail

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — D.P. Carter and his wife, Carrie met at a singing convention school. They loved music and all their children grew up liking it too.

Deciding there should be a quartet in the family, Dad called together three of his nine children, Rose, Anna, his oldest son Earnest (Jim), along with himself—to make up the Carter Quartet.

In less than a year they had a popular radio program, but the desire for greater outreach led them to the big city of Ft. Worth. Upon learning some of the smaller stations did not need a singing group, they auditioned for WBAP, one of the nation's largest stations. The station hired them immediately, and a Saturday program called The Round Up followed.

When they left the station, the Carter Quartet, who had only been with the station three months, was asked to assume the name Chuck Wagon Gang along with a radio program of the same name. Their program of western songs and one gospel feature was heard five days a week.

Because ninety percent of the requests demanded gospel, the group soon dropped the western songs. The program lasted fifteen years.

Meanwhile, Don Law of Columbia Records heard them, and phoned to ask if they would like to make records. Later that year, 1936, at a small studio set up in a San Antonio hotel, the Chuck Wagon Gang recorded their first song, The Son Hath Made Me Free. They remained with the same company for forty years, an achievement unparalleled by any other gospel group. During those years, the group has sold millions of albums and singles.

In the early fifties, the Gang began 10-day personal appearance tours. These tours brought brothers Roy and Eddie Carter into the group, as well as the late Howard Gordon, Anna's husband, guitarist for the group. Turning to television in the mid sixties, they were guests on several programs, and later co-hosts on their own program Gospel Roundup.

The Chuck Wagon Gang, noted Gospel quartet, will be appearing at 8 p.m. tonight, April 12, at the Guernsey Barn, 5 miles east of Lancaster, on Route 30. Doors will open at 6:30.

Produce firm shut down for failure to pay fine

BETHEL PARK — Charles N. Simeone, who does business as The Fruit Basket, Bethel Park, has failed to pay a Perishable Agricultural Commodities Act reparation award of $558 set by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in favor of a Pennsylvania wholesaler for numerous lots of mixed produce shipped during March and April, 1979.

According to the USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service, which administers PACA, the firm failed to answer the charges, and based on the evidence, it was ordered to pay the amount claimed.

As a result, the firm is not eligible to operate in the produce business subject to the Act until the award is paid. Simeone may not be employed by or affiliated with any PACA licensee without USDA approval.

Under PACA all interstate traders in fresh and frozen fruits and vegetables must be licensed by USDA, which is authorized to suspend or revoke any trader's license for violation. The Act established a code of good business conduct for the produce industry.

Paraquat cleared for alfalfa

LITITZ — A new EPA registration allows Ortho Paraquat CL to be used for weed control in alfalfa in states east of the Rockies and north of the southern borders of Colorado, Kansas, Missouri, Kentucky and Virginia.

The contact herbicide, a product of the Ortho Agricultural Chemicals Division of Chevron Chemical Company, is designed to be applied to well-established stands (at last one year old) after the last fall cutting when the crop is dormant or before spring growth reaches one inch.

According to Chevron's John Henszey, the new usage evolved from some no-till work in Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia. "We were growing no-till corn in old alfalfa fields, using a herbicide combination of Paraquat, Aatrex, and Princep," he said. About the time the corn came up, the alfalfa came back. The farmers would look at their fields and say, 'If I knew there was that much alfalfa in there, I would've kept the field in alfalfa.' What the herbicides did was to clean up all the competition. The alfalfa that was left could then grow freely."

When using Paraquat on alfalfa, growers are advised to mix two to three pints per acre to 20 to 60 gallons of water. This mixture can be applied by ground equipment as a broadcast application to contol bluegrass, chickweed, henbit and downy brome in addition to suppressing perennial grasses including orchard grass, Timothy and smooth broome. The higher application rate should be used to suppress the harder to control weeds and grasses, such as those in the perennial species.

Cattle group analyzes future of beef promotion

DENVER, COL. — A special committee of cattlemen has begun the basic analysis and planning work aimed at improving beef research and information programs in the years ahead.

The committee—named by Merlyn Carlson, president of the National Cattlemen's Assn.—met last week in Denver. The group was appointed following the recent defeat, in an industry-wide referendum, of a proposed uniform collection plan for beef promotion.

Carlson said the objective of the meeting was to analyze and reevaluate the entire situation—from needs, to collection methods, to program structure and operation—and to make recommendations to NCA's officers. It was agreed that any future programs would have to continue to be voluntary.

There were no proposals to hold another beef referendum.

Future committee discussions are likely to be held, but not until more information on producer attitudes is obtained. In the meantime, here are some of the preliminary conclusions. from this first meeting of the special committee:

The need for research and information programs continues. The industry needs research and information to fight anti-beef propaganda, and it needs more market development and promotion overseas as well as in the U.S.

More needs to be known on the extent and kinds of support which can be expected from cattle producers of all sizes and types. The group recommended a producer attitude survey on what levels of support can be expected in voluntary programs, best methods of collection, etc.

Meanwhile, industry groups should encourage as broad support as possible of existing programs--including those of the National Live Stock & Meat Board and state beef councils. This is not a time to "rock the boat." The industry should not try to create any new organizations; it should work through existing organizations.

Any future programs should be voluntary and should be based on state organizations and programs. Stronger producer involvement and support are needed.

For the longer term, it should be recognized that the industry and its structure continue to change. Long range objectives and plans should be developed now.

Members of the committee, in addition to Carlson, were Jo Ann Smith, Florida; Bill Swan (NCA first vice president), Idaho; Milton Brown, Michigan; Gordon Van Vleck, California; Peter Marble, Nevada; John Armstrong, Texas; Raymond Schnell, North Dakota; Bob Rebholtz, Idaho; Fred Boice, Arizona; W. D. Farr, Colorado; Sam Washburn, Indiana; Cal Coulter, Nebraska; Bob Josserand, Texas; John Klosterman, Nebraska. Staff advisors were John Huston, Meat Board, and John Meetz, Kansas Livestock Assn.

No-till forage field day slated for Tuesday

CLARKSVILLE, Md. — Grain farmers, livestock producers and dairymen are invited to a statewide no-till field day on Tuesday, April 15 at the University of Maryland's agronomy-dairy forage research farm on Folly Quarter Road near Clarksville, Howard county.

The field day emphasis will be on no-tillage establishment of forages and small grains, says Lester R. Vough, Extension forage crops specialist and associate professor of agronomy at the University of Maryland in College Park.

Vough reports that the morning program will begin at 10 a.m. with demonstrations of four different no-till drills which are currently available on the farm machinery market. Commercial representatives will be on hand to present information on their machines.

And Gary L. Smith, Extension agricultural engineer at the College Park campus, will answer questions concerning maintenance and equipment settings.

The afternoon program will be devoted to a field tour of no-till research and demonstration plots at the research farm. No-till establishment in barley stubble has been practiced for alfalfa field seedings at the farm since 1977. Some of these seedings have been done each year in late July during the annual farm family field day.

Noon lunch will be provided by the Chevron Chemical Company.

Magic Wand

What the milk market couldn't do for prices in six months the U.S. Department of Agriculture did overnight with its magic wand of price supports.

Struggling along since last October, manufacturing milk prices gained only eight cents up to March — from $11.22 to $11.30. The Minnesota-Wisconsin Price, which is just the two state price for manufacturing milk, didn't do much better but gained ten cents — from $11.25 to $11.35 in the same six months.

Then on April 1st in a flash of light and a puff of smoke, the USDA pulled out of its hat — not an Easter rabbit but something much better — an 85 cent increase that you can have until they return with the next magic act in six months, just before Halloween.

And like most magic acts, many farmers didn't even see how it was done but everyone certainly enjoyed the show and shouted "More! - More!"

That may be over dramatizing the situation a little but after struggling along for so many months with nothing much happening price-wise in the milk market it did seem to be somewhat spectacular. You've had bigger jumps in the support price before. But in the past half the increase was already earned in the market so the change wasn't so great.

No Secrets

There really aren't any secrets to this magic act. All that was needed was a little gadget called a Parity Index, available at any store selling price support supplies.

Another name for this gadget is the Index of Prices Paid by Farmers. So, now you can guess that the Parity Index told the magician that you should have an 85 cent increase, so that's what you got.

If you're interested in the nuts and bolts mechanism of the gadget, this is how it works.

Basically, the Parity Index increased 7.6 per cent from 866 to 932 in six months. The support price on October 1 was $11.22, and 7.6 percent of that is 85 cents.

Add it to the $11.22 and you get the new support price of $12.07, starting April 1st.

If you want to go deeper into the Parity Index workings, you should know that there are hundreds of different parts. They are all condensed into 15 systems or categories of things you buy, including consumer items such as food, furniture and clothing.

The average of all the categories was 7.6 per cent but some increase more than others and some were lower than six months ago.

You can probably guess that the biggest jumps were in fuels, fertilizer and interest with increases of 22, 25 and 29 per cent, respectively. The drops were in feed prices and feeder livestock, at 1.3 and .35 per cent.

The Consumer Price Index, which is included in the Parity Index for that food, furniture and clothing you buy, increased 6.8 per cent. You should also know that this is an index of prices paid by all farmers, not just dairy farmers.

There are some categories such as feeder livestock that really don't apply to dairy farming and some such as farm chemicals or farm wages that may be a more important share of farm expenses for fruit and vegetable growers than dairy farmers.

Because of this some people have argued that you have gotten more magic than you deserve in the past and you should have your own Dairy Parity Index or switch entirely to a Cost of Production gadget custom made for milk price supports.

Fallout

The important question for dairy farmers is how does all the fallout from this magic fairy dust made in the Never Never Land of Washington filter down into your bank account to pay all those bills that increased 7.6 per cent in six months?

It all starts with the announcement that the Commodity Credit Corporation of the USDA will start buying butter, power and cheese at increased prices. The butter support price went up $.0925 to $1.40 a pound; cheese up $.085 to $1.32 and powder up $.055 to 89 cents a pound.

If they do this long enough and hard enough, the magic starts to work on the manufcturing milk price by increasing the demand through grovernment purchases until the price goes up from its current level of $11.30 to $12.07, the new support price. This in turn will raise the Minnesota-Wisconsin price because processors will have to pay more for milk to make their products.

The Minnesota-Wisconsin price is used to determine the Basic Formula Price for Class I and Class II milk in Order 2. So Class prices rise in relation to the M-W price. From these Class prices you get your blend price according to the Class I utilization in the pool and from there it goes to your milk check and into your bank account.

This should keep your blend price over $12.00 this Spring and move it close to $13.00 this summer in Order 2. All of that takes some powerful magic but it's not over yet.

When and if market prices rise five per cent above the support prices for butter, powder and cheese, the CCC can start selling these products back to the processors or distributors to recover some of their money. Then CCC stocks become a lid or a ceiling instead of a support. Manufacturing milk prices won't rise further until the CCC storage stocks are sold.

Considering both the purchases and sales of CCC stocks, the price of all this magic may reach nearly a $1 billion this year. For that kind of money the Congress may decide to book a cheaper act for next year. So enjoy the show while you can because it may be the last performance.

Chester Conservation District sells trees

WEST CHESTER — On Friday, April 18, and Saturday, April 19, the District, in conjunction with several area groups, will sponsor the 6th annual tree seedling sale to help residents in the future of their land

Trees wouldn't seem to be a usual "investment" but Marshall Haws, Executive Conservationist for the Chester County Conservation District, says there is no better return on a small amount of money spent.

Aside from the obvious shelter for birds and wildlife, trees can reduce heating bills by 10-15 percent and summer cooling bills by as much as 75 percent, by acting as sun shields and a wind barrier. Trees reduce noise and air pollution, and provide fuel for heating.

This year's sale of 46,500 trees will begin Friday evening at 6:30 and Saturday morning at 9:30.

Pownall Jones, Chairman of the Conservation District, announced the following sponsoring groups and locations for the sale: National Secretary's Association of Chester County at Honeybrook IGA Store (Friday only) and Oxford Mall A&P; League of Women Voters of Central Chester County at West Goshen Shopping Center and Marchwood, Fiore's Market; Red Clay Valley Watershed Association at Kennett Square, Tunis Bros., and Greenbank R.R. Station on Rt. 41 north of Prices Corners, Delaware (Saturday only); Craig Ridgeway Elementary School at Coatesville Dairy Queen; B.S.A. Troop #70 at Downingtown Downing Center A&P, Thorndale Thrift Drug Store, Guthriesville Cropper's Market, and Marshallton C&C Landscaping; G.S.A. Troop #166 at Westtown Market Square Shopping Center; and the F.F.A. Northern Chester County Vo-Tech School at the greenhouse behind the Vo-Tech School off Charlestown Road (Friday from 3-6 p.m. and Saturday).

There will be a variety of seedlings, including Eastern White Pine, Norway Spruce, Colorado Blue Spruce, and Douglas Fir. The trees are 2 year old Pennsylvania grown stock and will be sold in bundles of 10 for $2.

In quantities of less than 10, the cost will be 25 cents per seedling. The trees are packaged with one species to a bundle, and there is no limit to the number that can be purchased.

Gale Rawson, coordinator of the sale, explained, "We will have planting instructions on hand for those who need them, and this year we will also include 'heeling in' instructions and have some information available about the species, sizes, and where to plant them for best results."

A sort of mirror known as a tapetum reflects light that enters the eyes of some animals, aiding their night vision. Cats, dogs, raccoons, bullfrogs, alligators, and spiders all have this "eyeshine," which sometimes make their eyes appear to glow.

Gr. champ feeder pig reflects today's market

NEW HOLLAND — H.D. Matz, a cattle dealer from the Ephrata area, bought the grand champion feeder pig at the Lancaster Swine Producers sale for the fourth year in a row.

This year's price didn't pinch his pocketbook quite like last year's, since the bidding stopped at $385. Last year, the price tag on the grand champ was $535.

The contending bidder who helped push the price along was Merle Eberly, R1 Stevens.

The grand champion pig was the high selling animal twice in the sale, when Matz later resold the pig for $70. This price was still not up to last year's lowest bid for the pen of champs.

Unfortuantely, this year's feeder pig sale fell at a time when the market just recently took a nose-dive to the bottom. The prices paid for the top pigs in the sale reflect just how bad prices are for the hog producers these days.

One tell-tale sign that this year's sale was not quite up to last year's came when the remaining five pigs in the six-head grand champion lot brought from $37 to $66. Last year, they ranged from $75 to $85.

"On the whole, the sale was at about half the sale average of last year," remarked Alan Diffenbach of the New Holland Sales Stables. He noted that the reserve grand champion pig this year sold for $38, where last year it sold for $63.

Excluding the two grand champion pigs in the heavyweight class, the prize-winning heavy feeder pigs averaged $37 each. The middleweight winners average $33 per head, and the lightweight winners averaged $25.

The remaining 228 head that did not win a ribbon at the afternoon's show sold for an average of $30 a head.

Over 100 people attended the sale, with a number of bidders being FFA or 4-H members buying their 1980 show prospects. SM

Kirkwood 4-H Club to organize

KIRKWOOD — The Kirkwood 4-H Club will hold its organizational meeting April 15, 7:00 p.m., at the Union Presbyterian Church.

Projects available for ages 8 through 19 years of age include: strawberries, vegetables, flowers, handyman, pigs, cooking, rabbits, entomology and sewing.

The agriculture and home economics clubs will also reorganize.

• Nolt shows gr. champ pen at Lancaster Feeder Pig Show

BY SHEILA MILLER

NEW HOLLAND — Dale Nolt, of Green Valley Farm, R1 Manheim, exhibited the grand champion pen of feeder pigs during the Lancaster County Swine Producer Association's fourth annual show and sale.

The show was held on Wednesday at the New Holland Sales Stables. Abram Diffenbach, president and manager of the sales stables, co-sponsored the event.

The grand champion pen of Hampshire pigs was the first place pen in the heavyweight class. Judge Max Smith, the Lancaster County Extension agent, said this pen showed the meatiness and trimness he was looking for.

Smith added the pigs exhibited the firmness and stretch he liked, were of sufficient size and scale, and looked bright-eyed and healthy.

"Although the pen I named as grand champion was not quite as growthy, or as high off the ground as the reserve pen, I felt these pigs exhibited more muscling and would provide more red meat for the consumer," Smith said.

The reserve grand champion pen of feeder pigs was the second place pen in the heavyweight class, exhibited by Little Piggy Farm, Watkins Glenn, New York.

All of the pens were judged on five quality areas, with a perfect score being 100 points. Smith said he looked at the vigor of the pigs awarding a maximum of 10 points. Vigor, he said, is the healthy appearance of the pigs. "Do they have a sparkle in their eye and pep to their walk?"

Smith rated the pigs on a scale of 10 for their condition—whether they're fleshy or skinny. A perfect score of 30 was possible for both growthiness and meatiness. Smith said he judged whether the pigs had short, dumpy frames or large, stretchy ones, along with their overall muscling.

And, last on his point sheet came uniformity, worth a possible 20 points. He said here he looked to see whether the six pigs had about the same size, scale, and conformation. Color he said was not important.

There were a total of 52 pens, with exhibitors coming from all over Pennsylvania, Maryland and New York. There were 7 lots of lightweights (30-40 lbs.), 20 middleweight pens (41-55 lbs.), and 25 heavyweight pens (56-70 lbs.).

The following are the class winners:

Carter signs measure to extend farm loan program

HARRISBURG — President Jimmy Carter has signed legislation extending the Farmers Home Administration Economic Emergency Loan program until September 30, 1981. The program was due to expire on May 15 this year.

J. Fred King, Farmers Home Administration Pennsylvania Director said, "President Carter's action will enable us to continue the Economic Emergency program, not only through the remainder of this year but through the next fiscal year as well. Although the EE program was not due to end until May 15, we were just about out of funds when the President signed the bill on March 30."

The EE program provides direct or guaranteed loans to farmers and ranchers who suffer economic hardship because of area or national economic conditions beyond their control. FmHA provided $56 million in economic emergency assistance to Pennsylvania farmers last year.

King said the new law immediately increases the ceiling on outstanding principle for EE loans nationwide from $4 billion to $6 billion. FmHA has already obligated the $4 billion authorized under the Agriculture Credit Act of 1978. The additional $2 billion will be allocated to the states, about half of it for use this year.

The new law requires that stronger "credit elsewhere" criteria be enforced before an EE loan can be approved. Any application for an insured loan of $300,000 or more must be accompanied by letters from at least two private lenders explaining why they turned down the request for a loan. FmHA expects to issue the strengthened regulations within 30 to 60 days.

The new law also requires the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a comprehensive study of the EE loan program and to recommend to Congress by March 31, 1981, whether or not the program should be extended beyond the September 30, 1981 expiration date.

Farm Talk

Jerry Webb

Several months ago in this space, I talked about a big land sale in Illinois involving hundreds of acres and price tags above $3000 an acre. It was billed as the land sale of the decade and it drew a lot of media attention. And now, thanks to good followup by Farm Journal magazine, I can tell you a little about one of those buyers and why he and several other farmers think cropland of high quality is worth $3000 or more per acre.

The land sale was a big auction held in a motel last summer. It involved 2700 acres in several different parcels owned by the Stokely-VanCamp Corporation.

One of the lucky, or unlucky buyers depending on your point of view, was Don Sanderson, who with his sons Dave and Dan farm about 1500 acres in DeKalb County, Illinois. The Sandersons figure they got a bargain at that auction–an 80 acre parcel for $2,920 an acre. They bought another 80 acres that wasn't quite as much of a bargain, going for a little more than $3000 an acre.

So how can a farmer talk about bargain prices when they approach $3000 an acre for land that will be planted to corn and soybeans? Well, according to the report, the Sandersons consider themselves pretty conservative when it comes to business practices, but they also figure you have to have land to farm. And they needed those two 80-acre parcels to go along with their other acreage in maintaining a viable farming unit.

"We figure a good farmer can handle about 500 acres now, and two good men actually can handle more than 1000. There are three of us farming and when we add these parcels to what we already farm, it brings us to just about 500 acres each," according to Poppa Sanderson.

The Sandersons went to the auction expecting higher prices and knowing what they could afford to pay. Once you've done that, they figure you have to have some faith and be willing to take some risks. The Sanderson family plans to be in the farming business for some time, and no doubt land prices will go up. So how can they lose?

It was a huge investment when you stop to think about it. A hundred and sixty acres times an average price of about $3000 an acre comes to $480,000. Of course, they didn't have to have all that in cash; they simply needed the down payment and the wherewith to handle the loan. Their other farmland provided the necessary equity.

It's meant some sacrifices for the Sanderson operation–cutting back on other plans to expand, and not buying new machinery. And they're forutunate that both of the sons' wives are employed at goodpaying, off-farm jobs. That means family living expenses are covered even in times of agricultural adversity.

It's hard to look at 1980 prices for corn and soybeans and justify $3000 per acre farmland. But the Sandersons, like most recent farmland buyers, talk about the future and what it holds and the necessity to control enough land to stay in the farming business. And they also talk about spreading those costs over the entire farming operation

One Iowa farmer quoted in the article said, "I've talked to my father and grandfather, and as near as I can tell land never would pay its way, so things aren t really that different today."

Perhap some farmers have been dragged under by the financial burden of overpriced land, but I suspect in the final analysis most farm failures have been for other reasons. Things like too much machinery, poor management, family problems, health, other interests.

It's easy to lose half the value of a piece of farm machinery in an unwanted farm auction. But it's seldom that a piece of ground is sold for less than what the owner paid for it.

So the real crux of the land-buying problem as far as the farmer is concerned is whether or not he can find the down payment and meet the mortgage. For as sure as the sun rises in the east, and the fields turn green in springtime, farmland prices will continue to increase.

Month of January shows rise in all but beef

HARRISBURG — Milk and egg production were up during the month of January in Pennsylvania, according to the Pennsylvania Crop Reporting Service.

Their report, just recently released, gave a total milk production figure of 687 million pounds for January. This was up seven percent from the same time a year ago.

This increase is a direct reflection of the greater number of cows in the state and their increased production. CRS puts the Commonwealth's cow numbers at 712,000 head, an increase of 7000 in one year period. The average milk production for these cows was up 55 pounds from a year ago, milking 965 pounds.

Egg production in Pennsylvania totaled 378 million for January, up 18 percent from the previous year's 319 million. This increase also reflects more birds and better production.

The January average for layers numbered 16.8 million birds, up 14 percent in one years' time. And the egg output from the larger flocks resulted in a total of 2052 eggs per 100 layers, an increase over 1979's 2019.

In the red meat industry, CRS reports hogs and lambs were also on the increase.

Hogs slaughtered in the month of January increased eight percent over last year's slaughter, totaling 300,800 head. Sheep and lambs increased four percent, at 12,600 head.

Cattle were the only ones to drop in numbers slaughtered for that month. The 52,200 head that made their way to the slaughter plants were down 13 percent. Calf slaughter was down too, with the 24,000 head showing a decrease of two percent.

Manor Young Farmers practice pipe welding

MILLERSVILLE — Three nights a week, Dale Ishman, advisor to the Manor Young Farmers, teaches his adult students the fine art of pipe welding.

For the tiny sum of $10, each of his 23 students this semester has received eight 2-hour lessons on laying out a project and testing the final welds for strength. Ishman notes that as far as he knows, his course is unique. While many courses are offered in welding, his deals with the more specialized art of pipe welding.

"Using donated scrap metals, my students practice layout, concentric reduction, laying out a T, vertical pipe welding, drilling, tapping, flat welding, fillet welding, curved cutting, curved welding, reduction and boring. And when the project is finished, they hook it up to an air hose and place it in a bucket of water to check for leaks," Ishman states.

In addition to the actual welding, students get instruction on the different types of rods and their applications, and working with specialized metals including rusty metal.

Ishman noted that there are many applications of pipe welding around the farm. Many gates and stanchions are constructed of pipe, as well as routine equipment repairs. Additionally, many agribusinesses employ workers who must use pipe welding in their job. And here in the course, the farmer can learn what kinds of welds and rods will produce a strong joint. Each joint is tested in the water to detect faults.

Attributing to the complexity of the project Ishman designed for the students, only one out of all the students in the course, Ron Hunt, achieved a leak-free weld. And Hunt had previously taken advanced welding courses.

While Ishman indicated that funding occasionally becomes troublesome for these adult courses, he stated that a similar course will be offered again next year.

Manufacturers approve wheat research program

WASHINGTON, D.C. — April 12 - Manufacturers of wheatbased foods have voted to fund a nationally coordinated wheat and wheat foods research and nutrition education program.

Assistant Secretary of Agriculture P.R. Smith said the order setting guidelines for such a program was approved in a mail referendum held March 17-28.

There were 107 yes votes and 74 no votes. Yes votes represented 59 percent of those voting and 68.4 percent of the volume of processed wheat used by all voters.

The order could have been approved in one of two ways: by at least two-thirds of those voting or by a majority which represented at least two-thirds of the volume of processed wheat used by all voters in assessable end-products, Smith said.

At least 50 percent of eligible registrants had to vote for the referendum to be valid. The number of manufacturers voting was 181 or 64 percent of 281 eligible registrants. A list of 301 eligible registrants was published in the Feb. 14 Federal Register. However, Smith said, the number of eligible was reduced because of challenges.

The program, authorized by the Wheat Research and Nutrition Education Act of 1977, will be financed by assessments on processed wheat purchased by certain manufacturers of products such as bread, cake, cookies, cereals or pasta.

A 20-member Wheat Industry Council composed equally of wheat producers, processors, end-product manufacturers and consumers will develop and administer the program. USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service will monitor the program.

Smith said any organization representing wheat producers, processors, end-product manufacturers or consumers can ask for certification to nominate members of the Wheat Industry Council. Certification request forms can be obtained from the Livestock, Poultry, Grain and Seed Division, USDA, AMS, rm. 2610-S, Washington, D.C., 20250. Deadline for receipt of certification request forms is June 2.

USDA estimates meat imports under quota trigger price

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland said U.S. meat imports in 1980 are expected to total almost 100 million pounds below the level which would require restraints on imports under the Meat Import Law.

USDA's second quarterly meat import estimate for 1980 is 1571 million pounds; the trigger point for imposing quotas under the law is 1668 million pounds.

Imports of fresh, chilled, and frozen beef, veal, mutton, and goat meat in 1979 totaled 1,554 million pounds under a program of voluntary restraint agreements negotiated with supplying countries. No restraint agreements were negotiated for 1980, since it did not appear that supplies of meat for export in those countries were large enough to raise U.S. imports above the level permitted under the Meat Import Law.

USDA estimated Dec. 31 that 1980 imports would total not more than 1,650 million pounds.

A countercyclical formula added to the law by the Meat Import Act of 1979 tends to increase the level of imports permitted in years such as 1980 when the level of U.S. cow beef production is low.

The third quarterly meat import estimate will be made in June and announced prior to July 1.

Longest serving AI technician recognized

TUNKHANNOCK — Charles Hunt has recently been recognized as the longest serving AI technician in America.

Hunt, who served as a technician for 39 continuous years, retired in July of 1978. But, his retirement has not stopped him from serving the farmers in Burlington County, New Jersey, as their relief breeder. Hunt worked for the North Eastern Breeders Association, a member cooperative of Sire Power, Inc.

Not a native of the United States, Hunt was born in Purple Valley, Ontario, Canada, the second child of a family of four, three boys and one girl. His early years were spent on his grandparent's farm in Purple Valley.

Hunt's father brought him to the U.S. after he had completed five years of high school in Wairton, Canada. Hunt and his brother and father were all employed concurrently as milkers at Walker-Gordon, at that time a large commercial dairy in Plainsboro, New Jersey.

After the elder Hunt died when Charlie was sixteen, Hunt's brother returned to Canada and Charlie traveled by bus out to San Fernando Valley, California, where he stayed for two years working as a milker for a family named Blackburn.

He then spent two years in Independence, Missouri working for his room and board. He lived in an unheated house so cold in winter that he had to wear his topcoat to bed to keep warm, and had no running water until spring thaw.

Hunt left Missouri and returned to Walker-Gordon. A lovely young teacher named Maxine Chamberlain caught his eye. They were married in Cranbury, N.J. on August 5, 1939.

While at Walker-Gordon, Hunt attended the Graham School where he expanded his knowledge and improved his AI technique. He was able to benefit from the knowledge of Enos J. Perry, who brought the idea of artificial breeding to the U.S. from Denmark.

In November, 1939, Hunt started work with the Plainsboro Bull Association in Plainsboro, N.J. His responsibilities included cleaning and exercising the bulls, collecting semen and breeding cows.

Even after becoming manager of the Plainsboro Association, Hunt continued to collect semen and breed cows. From 1939 to 1978, he bred over 2,000 cows.

The Burlington County Cooperative Breeding Assn. hired Hunt as an AI technician in 1945. At this time, they were receiving service calls via the State Police and sterilized the vials in their home ovens.

Over a period of years and several mergers, the Burlington County Association eventually joined forces with NEBA on October 1, 1964.

The Hunts rented and later bought a farm just outside of Allentown, N.J. where they raised cows, chickens and children.

The cow operation became the main business of the farm after Hunt formed a partnership with his brother-in-law Stuart W. Brown. Brown managed the 90 head herd while Charlie was on the road breeding cows.

Charlie and Maxine raised nine children, six sons and three daughter. Seven of his children attended college. According to Charlie, 'that keeps you poor.' Their nine children have blessed them with 11 grandchildren.

Presently Hunt spends a good deal of time helping a local young farmer get started. His help is so appreciated that this young farmer named his first child Charles, after Hunt.

Poultry disease seminar offered at Lancaster

LANCASTER — A seminar on management for controlling poultry diseases will be presented April 22 at the Host Farm, east of Lancaster.

The meeting, sponsored by American Scientific Laboratories, will begin with registration at 6 p.m. Program starts at 6:30.

Featured speaker is Dr. Robert Eckroade, head of the Poultry Diagnostic Laboratories of the University of Pennsylvania at Kennett Square.

Dr. Eckroade's presentation will be a research update on Laryngotracheitis (LT disease).

In particular, he'll tell farmers about recent research on the effectiveness of LT vaccination.

Due to recent LT problems, the topic may be of special interest to layer and broiler operations. High mortality rates generally accompany LT making it expensive for producers if allowed to get out of hand.

Joining Dr. Eckroade on the program is Dr. Richard Dutton, ASL veterinarian from Madison, Wisconsin.

He will speak on the use of antibiotics for disease control.

Think safety before planning tree location

UNIVERSITY PARK - Individuals, groups, and organizations who plan to plant trees and shrubs on home grounds or public places next Spring should be aware of the safety aspects involved.

For example, planting at intersections should receive special considerations, says J. Robert Nuss, Extension ornamental horticulturist at The Pennsylvania State University.

Plant trees at least 15 feet back from intersections. On the average streets, trees should not branch any closer to the ground than 8 feet.

On streets traveled by large trucks, the first branch should not be closer to the ground than 14 feet; and shrubs at intersections should not grow any taller than two feet, to assure clear vision, says Nuss.

Try to avoid planting evergreen trees where they will shade streets or sidewalks in winter. Evergreens so planted prevent the sun from reaching these areas and prevent snow and ice from melting.

Another point to consider is that conifers, the needle type evergreens, do not thrive well in heavy traffic areas where salt spray and wind currents from the roadway may injure the foliage, adds Nuss.

Interest rates current key to broiler growout profits

GEORGETOWN, Del. — The profitability of raising broilers today depends heavily on the rate of interest you pay on the broiler house. Any grower contemplating construction of a new house should take a close look at the economics involved. You may not be able to realize a return on your investment and labor.

This is the conclusion of University of Delaware extension farm management specialist Don Tilmon after a recent study of costs and returns from broiler growout operations on the Peninsula. The study was initiated last fall at the request of farmers who wanted information on the current profitability of broiler production.

The growers were concerned about apparent discrepancies in payments from integrators under "new house contracts" entered into over the last five years.

To answer their questions, a survey was conducted of broiler housing built in each of the five years just prior to 1979. In addition, housing 10 years old and 15 years old was also surveyed. Altogether structures from seven time periods were involved: 1964, 1969, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977, and 1978.

The results of the study show that while contract payments to growers with newer houses were higher than those to growers with older houses, the lower construction costs of these older units yielded a net return to labor and investment that was comparable to that of the newer ones.

Tilmon based his survey on financial information taken from growers' federal tax returns for 1978 – the most recent year for which complete records were available.

Farmers involved in the study were selected at random from grower lists of integrators representing approximately 70 percent of the broiler market on the Shore. The number selected from each list was proportionate to that company's share of the market. A total of 160 houses were surveyed. All but six were included in the analysis.

The survey was conducted in cooperation with members of the Peninsula Poultry Growers Association and the grower committee of Delmarva Poultry Industry, Inc. Funds to collect the data were provided by DPI.

Data collected included: size, capacity and cost of constructing and equipping houses built during each of the seven time periods; operating costs per thousand birds and per square foot paid by growers in 1978 in houses built during each time period; and contract payments to broiler growers during the survey year (1978).

To adjust for inflation of building and equipment costs over the 15-year construction period, Tilmon translated financial investment data from each of the previous years into 1978 dollars.

Viewed this way, the results were quite surprising. Contrary to many people's expectations, costs and returns were remarkably constant, he says, regardless of when houses were built. For example, during 1978 average fixed costs to produce 1000 birds ranged from $18.88 in a house built during 1964 (investment costs stated in 1964 dollars) to $42.42 in a house built in 1978.

But when the 1964 dollars were inflated to 1978 values, the cost of producing birds in the older unit was not that different — $40.43

In fact, the overall average fixed cost per thousand birds produced in all ages of housing surveyed came to $43.53 when viewed in 1978 dollars.

Cash returns per thousand birds produced ranged from $113.31 in 1964-built houses to $131.45 in 1978 structures. But when fixed costs were subtracted and the amount available for labor and interest stated in 1978 dollars, the difference again was not that great: $62.12 in 1964 houses, $59.99 in 1978 houses.

When the cost of the money invested in housing and equipment was subtracted from this, the amount remaining for labor was amazingly constant. It ranged from $33.28 per thousand birds (in 1978 dollars) in units built in 1964 at 5.6 per cent interest, to $35.92 in buildings constructed in 1978 at 8.25 percent interest.

Tilmon's conclusion: "Among growers studied for the 1978 tax year there is little difference in the net cash revenue available for labor and interest. The relative well being of the broiler grower is there for a function of the interest he must pay for his money."

Looking beyond the survey year to 1979, he added, "Broiler housing built with money costing more than 8.75 percent is in a relatively poorer position than housing built during earlier times at lower rates."

The economist says his findings might have been quite different had the study included the 1979 tax year. This was not possible since the survey was conducted before 1979 returns were filed. It was during 1979 that interest rates took their big jump to 12 and 13 percent.

Also, halfway through last year the bottom fell out of the broiler market and production was cut back. So most growers didn't average

Take steps today to help corn pollinate

LANCASTER — It's not too early to think about pollination season — the long, hot July and early August days when a corn plant has to work its hardest Pollination is a "do or die" situation since the kernel begins to develop then and only then. It takes good management to help a crop through this critical period and make the most of yield potential.

Often a combination of conditions causing plant stress, including those early in the season, can hinder the corn plants' development at pollination time, says John Malcolm, seed production research scientist for Funk Seeds.

"Prior to planting, soil tests should be taken and the fields fertilized accordingly," says Malcolm. "If phosphorous and potassium run short, for example, it can show up as pollination stress later "

Another factor leading to poor pollination and smaller ears is nitrogen shortage. "Or sometimes," adds Malcolm, "stress at pollination can be caused by an imbalance of nutrients, such as too much nitrogen in relationship to potash. A shortage of micronutrients, such as zinc, can also create a pollination problem."

By far the most dramatic yield loss is caused by insufficient moisture, which can lead to silking after pollen shed. In very severe cases, where lack of water is combined with heat stress, the pollen may not be viable or there may be a pollen shortage if plant tops wilt, the Funk agronomist states.

"The need for water is most critical a week or two before and continuing through the pollination period," says Malcolm. "Proper irrigation scheduling for farmers with that option will help to minimize stress Minimum tillage practices which reduce water loss early in the season will also help "

To make the most of available water and nutrients, populations should be adjusted to the hybrid and soil type

"More plants fighting for water and nutrients can escalate a potential problem on some hybrids," Malcolm says.

Herbicide injury which weakens the plant can also affect the corn's pollination process. Misapplication can be the culprit, says Malcolm, although sometimes climatic conditions, such as too much or too little rain, heat or cold weather, can cause the chemical to fail.

Finally, the corn producer who scouts his field has a jump on pollination problems. Second generation European corn borers, for example, hatch and feed when pollen is being shed

Corn rootworms cause damage both as larvae when they feed on roots and reduce nutrient uptake, and as beetles when they clip silks.

Other insects whose feeding leads to pollination stress are corn leaf aphids, and in southern regions, earworms and armyworms as many flocks in their houses as they did in 1978 and therefore earned proportionately less.

One thing the survey does show is that in 1978 there was about a two-cent advantage to the grower in cash costs per square foot in the newer buildings, indicating that these are more efficient.

There was also a rapid increase in the cost of construction in the newer houses – even when expressed in 1978 dollars. This largely reflects increased energy costs. Insulation and ventilation are now required in these structures in order to reduce the costs of fuel and feed, which was paid by the integrator.

Commenting on the implications of his study and the grower concerns which prompted it, Tilmon noted that older houses which have not been renovated tend to be less efficient to operate than newer ones

It makes sound economic sense for an integrator to prefer to grow birds in those units which will have the lower production costs, he continued. This can put the farmer who wants to raise broilers in an unimproved old house in a potential bind. It may now cost him more to build a new one than he can hope to get back.

For this reason it's very important for growers to look closely at their estimated costs and returns before investing in any new house construction, he says.

It may seem confusing to talk in terms of 1978 dollars, when looking at the costs and returns from houses built 10 to 15 years ago. But the economist says it's essential.

"We're used to thinking about costs in terms of 1967 dollars and saying that an time costs twice as much now as it did then. But if you're talking about returns in today's dollars on a 1964 investment, you've got to look at that investment in terms of today's money or it will look twice as good as it actually is. This is because today's dollar is worth less than half of that earlier dollar."

Tilmon recommends that anyone considering a new investment in a broiler house obtain a copy of his study, which has been published as extension bulletin No. 119, "The 1978 Cost and Return Broiler Growout Study "

It would pay to look at this if for no other reason than to make an analysis of your projected investment.

"The figures are all there," he says. "All you have to do is plug in your own costs. Then take a look at your net and decide whether – in terms of cost – you'll get back enough to pay for your labor. It ought to be worth the time it will take to sit down and think about something you're going to have to spend 25 years paying for."

If you need help applying the data contained in the bulletin to your own circumstances, he suggests you call on him, or one of the other extension economists who serve the Shore, for help.

Individuals interested in receiving a copy of the bulletin should contact the DPI office or their county extension office in Newark, (302-738-2506); Dover, (302-678-4675;) or Georgetown, (302-856-5250). Ask for the 1978 Broiler Growout Study.

Berks Farmers' Association reviews Farm-City tour success

FFR
Staff Correspondent

BERNVILLE — Members of the Berks County Farmers' Association honored some of their own March 25th for hosting the successful Farm-City Week tours held last Autumn.

Also acknowledged during the annual Spring meeting held at the Bernville Grange were the workers for the membership drive.

Roy Christman, chairman for the farm tours remarked that approximately 8,500 people visited the 12 farms and agri-businesses participating in the program last year. Plans are being worked out for an exchange with Berks County industries through the Chamber of Commerce for tours between area farms and industries, Christman acknowledged.

Participating in the farm-city week tours held last year were: Dan-Val Farms, Richland; La-Conca D'Oro Mushrooms, Bethel; Way-Har Farms, Bernville; Roy Christman and Sons, Hamburg; Ar-Li Farms, Mohrsville; Dreibelbis Farms and Mill, Shoemakersville; Del-James Farms, Shoemakersville; Peter's Brothers Meats, Lenhartsville; Ontelaunee Orchards, Leesport; Harold Burkert, Fleetwood; and Stephen Day Dairy Goat Farm, Womelsdorf.

Harry Shaak, Hamburg, was honored as the retiring co-op chairman of the membership committee. Jack Kooker, association president remarked on the dedication and long hours donated by Shaak, and listed the present membership role at 1143 families. Replacing Shaak is Jeffrey Miller, Kutztown, last year's co-chairman.

Also honored for signing up the largest number of members was Lloyd Dreisbelbis, Shoemakersville. Dreisbelbis, a past membership chairman, received the county Kingpin award for his successful efforts.

Remarks were made by George Manbeck, Womelsdorf, on a visit he and several other members made to Washington, D.C. to discuss the views of the Berks County Farmers' Association with Representative Gus Yatron.

Berks Farmers

Manbeck said that marketing, the Farm Labor Act, and balancing the federal budget were discussed and both parties agreed on their support but Yatron disagreed with the farm representatives on national health insurance opposed by the county organization. Also discussed was truck deregulation.

Art Hershey and David Seiple, members of the PACMA Board of Directors, discussed a new program being offered by the cooperative. Seiple, the representative for Pennsylvania vegetable growers, presented the county association members with the new logo of the cooperative and explained a fund drive where PACMA is planning to raise $300,000 through the sale of preferred stock at $100 per share.

To be eligible to buy the preferred stock, members must first own a share of common stock at a cost of $25 per share, Seiple explained.

The funds raised by the sale of preferred stock, which yield eight percent interest annually, will be used as an interim payment between farmer customers when livestock or produce is bought and sold through the PACMA program.

Seiple noted that PACMA had a gross sales of over $9 million last year. The cooperative presently is expanding to establish receiving stations for market hogs. These facilities can also be employed for cull cows, feeder pigs, sheep and other livestock, Seiple explained.

"You may not need us now to market your products," the board member said in urging the farmers to support the program, "but you may need us in the future."

In related business the Berks County Farmers' Association formed a committee, chaired by Lloyd Dreibelbis, to help sell the shares of preferred stock being offered. Purchases must be members of Pennsylvania Farmers' Association to be eligible.

It was also noted that holders of common stock who do not participate in the PACMA prgoram within 18 months may redeem the common stock for the purchase price of $25, and still keep their interest yielded preferred stock.

Future plans listed by PACMA board members include the possible use of tele-auctions, exporting programs, and processing facilities.

Presently, PACMA offers protection for farmers selling through the cooperative by guaranteeing them their money. Interested farmers should contact any member of the Berks County Farmers' Association board or the chairman of the PACMA committee for share applications.

Members also were reminded that preferred stock can be purchased in the name of association members' children and the interest rate paid on the shares is more than paid on passbook savings accounts. The stocks are redeemable at any time with the approval of the board of directors.

Lloyd Dreibelbis, left, received his Kingpin Award for highest number of members signed up from Jack Kooker.

Laura Miller, a member of Tulpehocken FFA spoke during the banquet, thanking the women's committee for giving her the opportunity to attend a youth conference held last summer at Elizabethtown College.

Debra Harnish, ventriloquist, entertained the audience of Berks County Farmers with her friends, Cocoanut and Kelly.

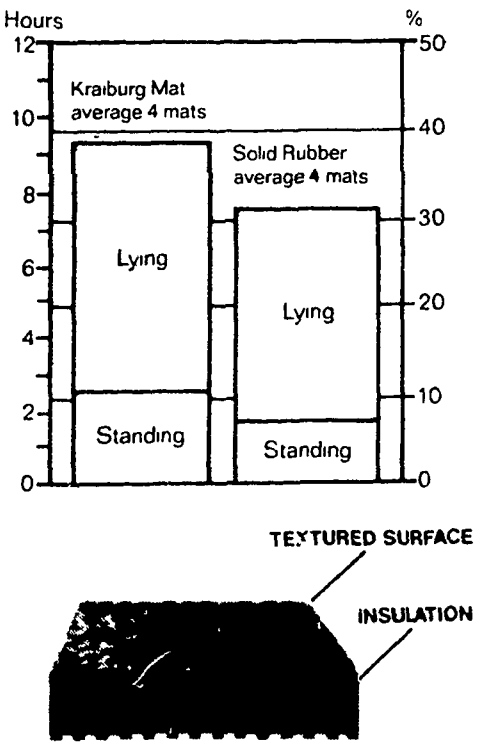
Kraiburg Happy MooMats Keep Cows Happy, Resting...and Profitable!

The installation of our mats in your free stall or stanchion barn doesn't just save you time, which is money, it helps your herd give more milk, which means added profit! And more! Just look at the following:



Elastic comfort surface. Our advanced rubber chemistry and design groups have developed a surface and a rubber understructure that provides a pleasant lying surface and results in noticeably increased milk yield. Testing has shown that increased milk yield results from increased comfort in lying and standing time. Details available on written request.

Sanitary non-porous texture. Resists barnyard acids, trapping of bacteria and disease. Reduces barn odors.

"Sure-grip" textured surface. Specially developed tread surface gives solid footing, protection against udder injuries, abrasions and sore hocks.

Excellent heat loss resistance. Keeps cows' body heat from dissipating. Thermal insulation action rejects cold and dampness from concrete underflooring and minimizes mastitis.

Saves bedding materials. Reduces yearly bedding costs by up to $7,000.00 per 100 cows.

No bulging, edge or hair cracks. Superior compounding and proper ¾" thickness provide insurance against wear, aging and loss of service.

10 Year Warranty Program. Because Kraiburg products are carefully manufactured and have been thoroughly tested, we back every cow mat sold with a Ten Year Warranty.

Grange asks if government takes advantage of farmers

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Are farmers becoming an easy mark? asks Ed Andersen, Master of the National Grange.

It would seem everytime the Administration talks about balancing the budget and puts forth an anti-inflation message, farmers head the list of who's going to be hurt the most, said Andersen.

The American farmer can always be counted on to do his part, to sacrifice as much as the next American, but there comes a time, said Andersen, when farmers have to ask themselves if they are being taken advantage of because they do not represent a major voting block and subsequently have become an easy mark.

Andersen said he feels the American farm population showed considerable restraint and understanding when the President announced the Soviet grain embargo in January. He said farmers knew the embargo would have some effect on their economic future regardless of the President's statements that he would offset the loss of sales through various price support programs.

At present, corn prices have dropped 30 cents per bu. and soybeans, $1.10 per bu. Farmers don't have the money to pay back last year's production loans or for planting this year's crop. In addition, the President's latest call for higher interest rates and tighter credit controls is putting farmers into an impossible situation.

Farmers just cannot survive in the face of plummeting farm prices particularly at a time when money is needed for this year's planting season. The President has also ordered Secretary of Agriculture Bergland to limit farm credit by raising farm credit rates and has threatened to veto an on-farm storage facility loan program because the interest rate is not high enough.

Andersen said the American people better prepare themselves for a change in their diet because farmers will not be able to produce what they can't afford to plant or feed.

Power Lac is specially formulated complete milk replacer containing 22 protein and 15 fat. The combination provides the proper balance of amino acids and high energy levels so essential to the newborn calf following the first 3 days of colostrum feeding.
Power Lac quickly dissolves in water mixes thoroughly and stays in suspension in open tubs, and will deliver smooth and pleasing aroma because Power Lac is flavored. Taste and intake trials and research at The Ohio State University have shown that calves grow at least as rapidly when fed Power Lac as when fed whole milk.

Denise Andrien ends busy year as 1979 Jersey queen

BY JANE BRESEE
Staff Correspondent

WEST BURLINGTON — Denise Andrien of West Burlington, Bradford County, the 1979 Pennsylvania Jersey Cattle Queen relinquished her crown recently.

Denise strongly feels that the most important qualities of her successor, Stephanie Kocker, will need are a knowledge of dairying and a love for the Jersey cow.

For 20 year old Denise, love for the Jersey cow began when she was 11 years old, back in Chester County where she lived with her mom and dad, Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Andrien, Sr. and her two brothers, Bruce, Jr. and Lorrin. Her father was not a farmer but a contractor.

A neighbor from whom the family bought their milk invited Denise to a 4-H meeting. The next step was to persuade her to take a purebred Jersey calf as a dairy project. Her enthusiasm for the calf spread to her brother, Bruce, and the next year when he was 9, he also took a Jersey calf for his project.

In no time at all, the play house in the back yard bulged with 4 calves and a bull. The family rented a barn nearby.

Mrs. Andrien relates that they vowed at first not to keep any animal large enough to give milk, but when the first one calved, they decided to keep her as a family cow. The next one they could not bear to sell, nor the next...and so the herd grew.

The family finally decided to move out of Chester County and buy a farm in the northeast. They looked a long time, but the minute they saw the place in West Burlington, just off Route 6, between Troy and Towanda, they knew they had found what they wanted.

They moved in December, 177 with 33 cows, 19 of which were milking. The whole family has worked hard to put the barns and fences in shape. Denise is proud of the latest accomplishment, a maternity barn with large separate pens. She is pushing her dad hard to fix up the "back barn" for the heifers.

Denise graduated from Troy High School in June 1978 and enrolled in Penn State to study to be a veterinarian, a lifelong dream. But she put off going to school because life was too stimulating building up the herd average from 7000 pounds to the present average of 10,325 pounds of milk and 488 pounds of fat. Presently she is truly the herd manager with 49 cows, 37 of which are milking and filling all the available stalls in the barn. She knows the DHIA records on all of her pets and does some of her own veterinarian work. Her dream is to have a "decent" herd with name and production to make them top sellers at state sales.

Denise Andrien who recently ended her reign as the state Jersey queen, shows off her highest producer, 6 year old Wallebe Daylight Itaska with a projected record of 15,295 pounds of milk, 794 pounds of fat, and testing 5.2 percent.

She and her brother, Bruce, like to show their prize animals and for years have competed at fairs, state Jersey calf shows, etc. This last year she and her brother walked off with Grand Champion and Reserve Grand Champion rosettes from several fairs, and from the Junior Jersey Cattle Show in Harrisburg.

During her reign as queen of the Jersey Cattle Club, she was kept busy attending 6 district Jersey shows, 4-H and FFA events, giving out ribbons at the Berks and Chester County Fairs, attending the National Queens' Contest in Louisville, Kentucky, and assisting at Jersey calf shows.

Cows aren't her only interest. Denise has a grade bay quarter horse in foal and a litter of Irish Setter pups. She also taught a dog obedience school at a nearby pet farm last summer.

Stephanie Kocker chosen 1980 queen

BY JANE BRESEE
Staff Correspondent

EAST ATHENS — Stephanie Kocker, Mansfield, was crowned the 1980 Jersey Queen at the Jersey breeders' annual meeting held recently.

Stephanie is the 16 year old daughter of Ned Kocker. She has been involved in FFA and 4-H work showing sheep, pigs and beef cattle in addition to owning 4 Jersey cows. Her hobbies are skiing, ballet, and journalism. Her dream is to write for the Jersey Journal.

The other contestant was Eugenia Lee Harpster, Boalsburg, the 19 year old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harold Harpster. Eugenia also has worked in 4-H and FFa production clubs and owns 9 Jersey cows of her own.

Both girls gave 3 minute prepared speeches on the topic - What I Like About Living On A Farm.

Angelika Koonz, Fredonia, chairman of the Youth Program, told the audience of 100 Jersey enthusiasts that the queen is the only representative of the Jersey Cattle Club. "The better she is, the better the youth program will be." she stated. Then Angelika turned the program over to the group's own Bert Parks alias Bob Driesbaugh, a veterinarian from Hamburg.

Denise Andrien, outgoing state Jersey Cattle Club Queen, crowns Stephanie Kocker, Mansfield, the organization's 1980 queen.

Families can get involved in statewide forums

MEDIA — In your opinion, how can we strengthen and support families in America today? What can be done to help the family deal with inflation. What effect does government and the work place have on family life?

No doubt these and similar questions have been bantered back and forth across many family dinner tables.

But now you can make your voice heard. You can speak up about the family and its well-being and your ideas and recommendations can be part of Pennsylvania's recommendations to The White House Conference on Families in Baltimore June 5, 6, and 7.

The Pennsylvania Forum on Families, in preparation for The White House Conference, is urging people across the Commonwealth to organize or attend a Family Forum. Citizen input is the key to a set of guidelines and recommendations that reflects the feelings and concerns of as many people as possible. The Delaware County Extension office has copies of The Pennsylvania Forum on Families' Guidebook. The 12 page Guidebook offers tips on organizing, planning and publicizing a local family forum.

If you would like more information on Family Forums, call or write to Maryetta Dorricott, Delaware County home economist, Toal Building, 2nd & Orange Sts., Media, Pa. 19603.

Sights and sounds of an awakening land

BY DICK ANGLESTEIN

LANCASTER COUNTY — The land awakens in many different ways.

A warming wind whirs through trees which yawn and stretch their bareness as if shedding the final kinks and stiffness of a long and deep slumber.

Each small, swaying brown tentacle is tipped with the beginning of a new life that will soon burst forth into a cloak of green.

The wind's whir is never constant.

As a whisper, it gently nudges the budding branches into a lazy, bobbing motion.

Suddenly, the volume accelerates into partially a whine and partially a whistle, pitching and rolling the trees' fragile framework frantically.

Then, the ever rising and falling natural whir is mixed with a steady mechanical drone off in the distance. The mobile, mechanized hum comes from several directions all at once.

The wrap-around stereo sound of man and machine flows forth from a colorful collage of green, brown and white.

Across a rolling field of emerging green, the source of one such sound moves systematically to and from a barn with twin cylindrical towers. The red tractor tows an empty spreader toward the barn and returns with heaping contents for casting across the land.

Drifting from another direction is a similar sound that comes from a tractor more blue than the sky overhead. Tugging and pulling slowly over a field of brown, it cuts and chisels into the earth, churning the smooth, dull shade of ground in front into a deeper, richer hue that follows on behind.

And out of yet another mechanical din, massive willowy clouds of white erupt in great, smoky puffs. In the wake of the explosion of white, a powdery dust settles to the earth like newly-falling snow.

Not too far from these varied mechanical agricultural awakening activities, an elderly couple moves silently and slowly through a field.

She carries a small pail and he grasps a small knife.

He eases into a slow-motion stoop and swirls the knife deftly around the base of a flat, spiny plant, neatly cutting the single root.

Into her pail is tossed the plant, which in not too many weeks would blossom forth into the bright yellow of a miniature vegetative sun. But for now, covered with a warm bacon dressing, it becomes a tangy dinner salad for the aged gleaning couple.

Even the final remnants of a half-year-old harvest are being completed in still another nearby field. Corn stalks, flattened by the winter's snow that followed last fall's combining, are being fluffed by a rake. A baler, just pulled from storage, stands waiting to collect and pack the fodder before the field can be prepared to launch another season of growth.

In addition to man and his machines, animals are to be increasingly found on the awakening land.

More and more, splashes of black and white are dotting the greening hillsides. Seemingly anxious to be free of the confinement and concrete of barns, they contentedly settle down onto the warming earth or amble aimlessly back and forth.

Stirring also are sheep still bulging with winter's wrapping of wool. As temperatures continue to gradually climb, they appear to sense the fast approaching time to be shed of the fleecy, soft coats.

As observed from an elevated view, the quilt-like patchwork of an awakening land is fast taking shape. With a needle of spreading warmth, each day sews a new patch into the farmland fabric.

Here, a field is turning a deepening green.

There, another field is plowed into a dark, rich brown.

And over there, lime turns a field dusty white.

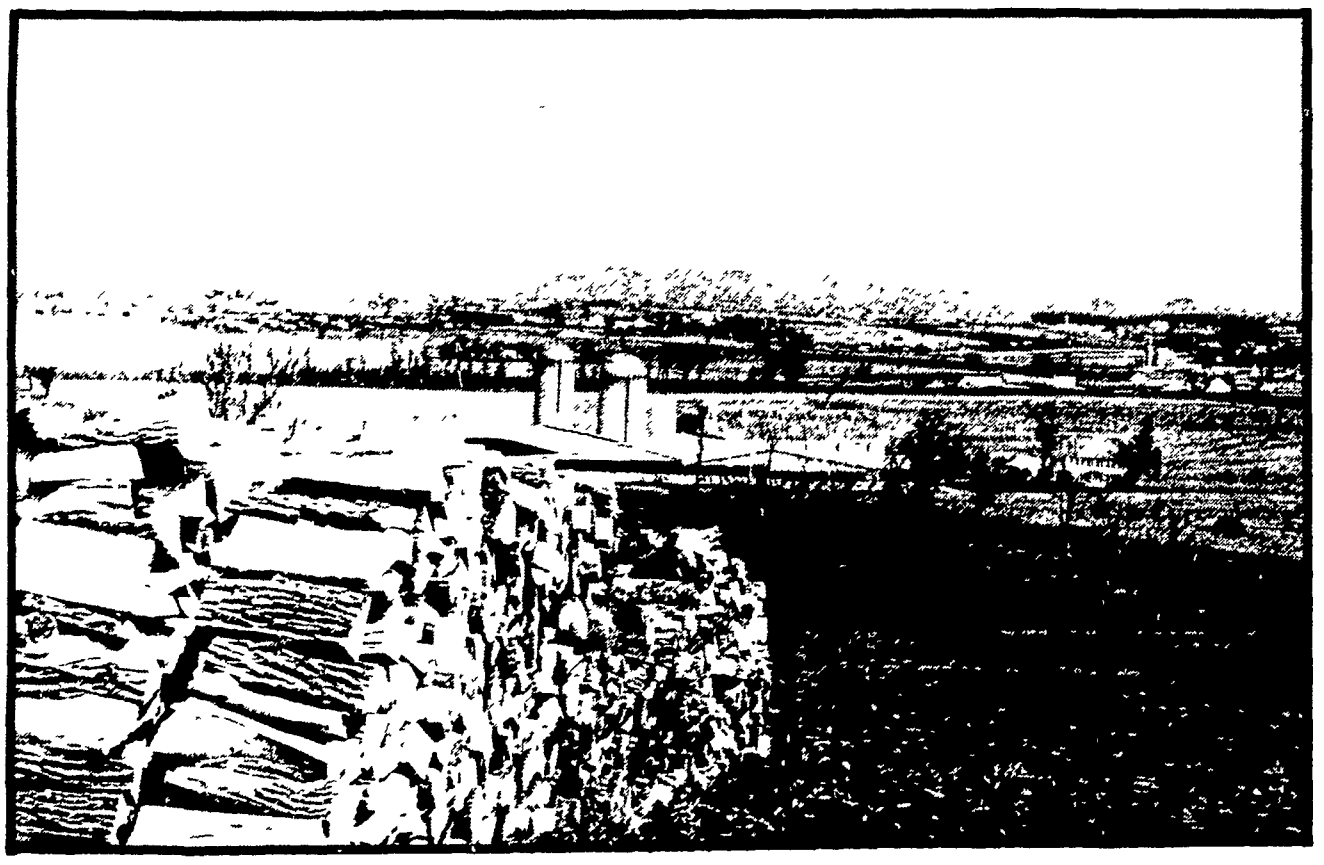
But even as April brings the land back to life and its caretakers to ever increasing levels of outside activity, a reminder or two of the faded and nearly forgotten winter remain.

Large mounds of wood are neatly stacked next to many farm houses and rural homesteads as monuments to a season just past.

Now, it is a time that these stacks will lie idle and unused.

So, the cycle of pastoral contrasts goes on.

A time for awakening and activity. And a time to lie fallow and rest.



Soybean Association asks swift action to alleviate depressed prices

ST. LOUIS, Mo. — The American Soybean Association has urged congressional leaders to take swift action to alleviate depressed soybean prices accentuated by USDA's selling of embargoed soybeans.

"We have waited three months for President Carter to fulfill his promise that farmers would not bear the full burden of the Soviet embargo," said ASA President Allan Aves.

"Instead of fulfilling that pledge, the government has started to sell huge quantities of the embargoed soybeans. As a result, soybean prices have dropped nearly 40 cents a bushel in the past week.

"After consulting other ASA grower-leaders, I have decided to ask Congress to undo the considerable damage which the Carter Administration has leveled on American soybean growers. I have sent telegrams to Senator Herman Talmadge, Congressman Tom Foley and members of the House and Senate agriculture committees urging them to take immediate action to end this burden which has already cost U.S. soybean growers over $1.5 billion."

In his telegram, Aves asked Congress to take the following action:

Implement the six-point program to sell soybeans which ASA had proposed to Agricultural Secretary Bob Bergland on January 7.

The program included increasing CCC export credits by $298 million; increasing Food for Peace (PL480) funding; implementing intermediate-term credit provisions of the Agricultural Trade Act of 1978; making CCC export credits available to the People's Republic of China; creating a $5 billion revolving fund for CCC export credits; and increasing soybean market development funding by $6 million over the next three years.

Although only the market development funding would require federal outlays, ASA has received no positive response to its January 7 proposals.

Take action to remove the cross compliance provisions, thus making all soybean growers eligible for the soybean loan program.

Increase the soybean loan level from the current $4.50 to $5.02 to provide farmers with an additional source of capital to meet increasing production costs. Rather than serving as a guaranteed minimum price and to avoid becoming a price ceiling, ASA believes the loan level should represent 65 percent of the national average cost of production.

Although USDA has yet to release 1980 production cost estimates, ASA has based its $5.02 loan level request on figures secured from land grant universities.

Take action to sell the CCC-purchased Soviet soybean contracts to developing nations rather than unloading the contracts on the U.S. market which has further depressed prices.

"The Soviet embargo, which is providing to be an unmitigated disaster for American soybean growers, is having little impact on the Russians," Aves told the congressional leaders.

"Even USDA admits that the Soviets will get all but 2 million tons of their needs. The embargo had dramatically lowered U.S. farm prices and, like the 1973 and 1975 embargoes, has encouraged increased soybean and grain production in Brazil, Argentina and other competing countries.

"Soybeans are the No. 1 U.S. agricultural export and generated over $7 billion in foreign sales last year. It appears that only Congress can undo the damage created by the Carter Administration and we have urged congressional leaders to take swift action to alleviate the current crisis in the farm communities of this nation," he said.

Wingert addresses Manheim Young Farmers

EAST PETERSBURG — The Manheim Young Farmers held their annual banquet here at the Fire Hall, Friday.

Speaker for the evening was Eugene Wingert, Regional Director for the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture.

Wingert attempted to give the group an understanding of the make-up of the state department of agriculture. He noted that there are 7 regions which each operate as a microcosm of the department itself. In addition, there are 8 bureaus each with its separate functions.

The Bureau of Foods and Chemistry, he noted is the largest, in fact, as large as three other bureaus combined. Foods and Chemistry safeguards the public health through rigid supervision of the public food supply.

The Bureau of Markets is in charge of markets and market reports, promotions for - various commodities, fair funds and the state logo.

The Bureau of Plant Industry has the responsibility of administering laws pertaining to pests and plant pathology.

The Bureau of Dog Law, Wingert termed the family feud division, noting the many neighborhood disputes the bureau is called upon to settle.

The Bureau of Animal Industry is responsible for the control and eradication of livestock and poultry diseases.

The Bureau of Weights and Measures protects the state's consumers against shortages at scales and gas pumps.

The Bureau of Rural Affairs is designed to aid in the well being of highly populated rural areas.

The last Bureau is the Bureau of Administrative Services.

Wingert invited the group to make use of his Region 6 office located at the Lancaster Stockyards.

Daniel Fair, club advisor, directed the group to continue to build on the success of the past year. Fair who will be leaving his post as advisor at the end of the year noted that while the club had suffered a slump in recent years, it is once again alive and well.

Fair also presented gas welding certificates to Donald Hershey, Larry Hershey and Ronald Kline.

4-H volunteer positions are not thankless jobs

CLEMENTON — Volunteer involvement is 4-H is limited "only by your imagination and ability," according to Sara Drabik, Camden 4-H Agent.

There are many types of jobs in 4-H, Drabik points out, and volunteers should be encouraged to participate whenever needed and available.

Volunteer jobs that are becoming more firmly established, Drabik says, are "key" county or area subject matter leaders. Adults who fill such positions have responsibilities for overall planning and programming in specific areas such as food and nutrition, clothing, horse management and pet care. They also supervise other volunteers and act as liasons between local volunteers and salaried staff members. "Subject matter volunteers right in neighborhoods ought to provide 4-H leaders with much stronger support," Drabik says.

Volunteer organizational, project and activity leader positions are available for both 4-H clubs and for short-term special interest projects such as bicycle safety and child care. In addition, many adult volunteers are needed to work in the county 4-H program committee structure.

"4-H positions are not thankless jobs", according to Drabik. "While we are asking leaders to invest their time, energy and resources in 4-H programs, volunteering is not a one way street," she says. "Not only do volunteers have opportunities to watch youth develop and assume responsibility, but they also receive up to date training in their own specialities."

CCC defers delivery on corn and wheat

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland announced last Monday the Commodity Credit Corporation has deferred to a later delivery month contract obligations covering corn and wheat which had been scheduled for May delivery.

These contracts were acquired by the CCC as a result of the suspension of exports to the Soviet Union.

Allow only trained, competent people to operate farm equipment. Keep children away.

County FFA public speaking and parliamentary procedure contests held

NEW HOLLAND — With his speech, "The Cry of the American Farm Boy," Doug Hershberger of the Solanco FFA won the senior division of the county public speaking contest held recently at Garden Spot High School.

Emphasizing taxes, zoning, land values and loss of farm land to development as the problems facing young men entering the world of farming, Hershberger advised his listeners "not to allow farm decisions to be made outside of agriculture."

He called upon his fellow Future Farmers "not to be passive observers, but active participants. I intend to do what I can to participate in the leadership to preserve American farm ground for the farmer of tomorrow."

Barry Geib from Manheim Central topped the field of participants in the Soil Conservation Service contest.

Geib's winning speech opened with a passage from Genesis 2:15 and emphasized that man has indeed dressed the world — in pollution. He emphasized that in order to live up to the goals of the Clean Water Act to have fishable, swimmable waters by 1985, everyone must pitch in and do his part to clean up the nation's waterways.

Cow sterility expert to speak to dairymen

FLEMINGTON, N.J. — Noted dairy cow sterility expert, Dr. James Evans, University of Pennsylvania School of Veterinary Medicine, will speak to a group of area dairy farmers and 4-H youth on Friday evening, April 18, 8 p.m. at Hunterdon County's Extension Center, Flemington, N.J.

Dr. Evans is a Professor of Veterinary Medicine and heads up the Pennsylvania Embryo Transfer Service, a leader in the techniques involved in transfering embryos from outstanding brood cows to host animals, reports David Douglass, Pittstown, chairman of the meeting.

Co-sponsoring the affair is the Hunterdon County Extension Service and the Central Jersey Holstein Assn.

Dr. Evans will discuss reproduction in dairy cattle and highlight his remarks with an up-date on the embryo transfer service he represents.

Some of the new aspects of the program to be discussed are results of current research in freezing and storing embryos, non-surgical collection of embryos, and results in sexing embryos.

Meeting is open to all persons interested in breeding dairy cattle, says Douglass. For more information call 201/782-4300, ext. 338.

FABRAL CORPORATION — METAL ROOFING AND SIDING

Fabral roofing and siding panels are custom-cut to length according to job specifications. This saves on material, erection time and labor costs. Most panels can be overlapped in segments of 6" or 8" to minimize longitudinal cutting. Fabral panels are available painted or in natural galvanized steel or aluminum. Painted panels have a baked on finish that is weather resistant and one that will retain its original beauty for years.

USDA announces sale of soybean contract rights

WASHINGTON, D.C. — Secretary of Agriculture Bob Bergland today said the Commodity Credit Corporation has assigned contract rights for 7.0 million bushels (191,280 metric tons) for U.S. no. 2 or better yellow soybeans.

The soybeans were acquired by CCC as a result of the suspension of exports to the Soviet Union.

Bergland said the weighted average prices on the successful bidders for Gulf delivery were $6.02 for April, $6.12-1/4 for May and $6.26-1/2 for June. The March 31 reported Chicago spot market price for U.S. no. 1 soybeans was $5.67 per bushel.

These soybeans were scheduled for delivery f.o.b. shipment during April, May and June from Gulf and Great Lake ports. This makes a total of 13.4 million bushels (366,280 tons) of soybean contracts sold by CCC since the invitation for offers was made March 20.

The remaining quantities for April delivery on the next tender are 20,800 tons and 5480 tons, both f.o.b. Gulf.

Offers will continue to be received for soybeans on Monday and Thursday of each week until the invitation is withdrawn, Bergland said. Successful offerers will be notified by 10:30 a.m. EST the day following the offer date. Public announcement will be made after the commodity markets close.

Offers are to be submitted to the deputy administrator for commodity operations, USDA-ASCS, room 218-W, Box 2415, Washington, D.C. 20013.

COME IN NOW FOR YOUR SEED NEEDS

Peace of mind comes in small packages.

It comes in a package as small as a Federal Crop Insurance policy. Because All-Risk Crop Insurance takes a lot of the worry and concern out of crop production.

It's a good feeling, too, to know your crop investment is protected from planting to harvest. And because you're covered, All-Risk Crop Insurance provides the needed incentive to spend a little more in fertilizers to produce a more profitable crop.

It's important to have crop insurance that covers the money you've laid out for seed, equipment, fuel, fertilizer, chemicals and labor. Costs that are continuing to build with each crop year.

Call your FCIC representative and find out how you can use Federal Crop Insurance to build peace of mind from planting time on — with no premium to pay until harvest time

Adams County Farmers talk road to success

GETTYSBURG — The "Y" in the Road was the title of a talk given by Richard W. Newpher, executive secretary of the Pennsylvania Farmers' Association at the spring meeting of the Adams County Farmers' Association held recently.

Newpher said PFA is supposed to help the farmer improve his net income and quality of life. Success will come, he said, because right decisions are made at the different forks in the road.

Food is more necessary to life than oil and developing nations are becoming more able to pay for American food, particularly the Arab nations. We should develop products for that market, Newpher said. He suggested farmers try to hold energy costs down and try harder to market our food to foreign countries.

Another thing farmers should be doing is attempt to limit government spending. Most people agree to this but they are not voting that way. We must change these people that are making decisions to spend wildly.

Spending limitations should be written into the state and federal constitutions, Newpher suggested.

Newpher pointed out that 38 percent of the average person's income finances the government, making it the largest single user of income in this country.

In comparison, he said,the same average worker spends 17 percent of his income for food.

Guy Donaldson, county president had introduced Newpher by stating that he joined PFA in 1973 as a regional organization director in what is now region V. He joined PFA's public affairs department in May 1976 as a legislative specialist and continued to move up in the organization.

David Muzzy, regional organization for Region II of PFA spoke briefly. He told of the powerful and effective lobbying force of PFA.

Committee reports were given. Donald Wenk reported on the Washington Legislative Tour. Horace Waybright reported on the state's Senate Legislation.

Gene McDowell presented a film on Safemark products sold and stored at the Middletown Warehouse.

Membership Chairman, Lloyd Benner reported 772 family members, a gain of 13 over last year. He also reported that Mrs. Horace Waybright brought in the most new members, 13, and was awarded the King Pin for Adams County this year

Janet Knouse and President Donaldson spoke on the preferred stock drive for the Pennsylvania Agricultural Cooperative Marketing Association. The preferred stock will pay eight percent interest, the maximum allowed for a cooperative. The drive will end April 30.

Howard Waybright, Political Energy Program Committee Chairman announced a meet the candidate meeting for the fall election. No meeting will be held this spring due to lack of competition.

Mrs. Waybright announced four farm safety poster winners. Elaine Stock age 14 won first prize and Laurie Myers second in the senior division. Amy Sue Cunningham first and Denton Guise was second in the Junior division.

Women's chairman Betty Donaldson announced the Ladies' "Spring Fling" will be held April 8 at the Sheraton Inn on Business Route 15 south, April 8 with registration beginning at 9:30.

Save that Fordson— it's historic

MILLBURY, Mass. — A new "preservation society" has been added to the list of groups cherishing classic Ford products – from Model T cars and Fordson tractors to Mustangs and Thunderbirds

The new organization is the Ford 2N, 8N and 9N Preservation Society Its founder, J. Todd Miles, of Millbury, Mass., publishes a magazine called "Small Farmer" for the society's members

Current issue of the magazine features a cover photo of Susan Miles driving the couple's 30-year-old Ford 8N tractor in a cabbage field on their "Greystones" farm. In the publication, Miles asks members of the growing society for advice on organization whether to elect officers, set up a board of trustees, or have an annual meeting. Typical magazine issues reproduce letters from members and free "ads" offering to buy or trade early Ford tractors and accessories.

One new member, Albert Peterson of the Geography Department at Western Kentucky University, donated a cover design and inserted an ad. "Wanted: Tool box for 2N in good condition Will buy or trade copies of the original owner's manual "

More then 800,000 "N" series Ford tractors were built from 1939 to 1952. Many are still in use on farms in America and abroad.

As early as 1917, Ford had built "Fordson" tractors in Dearborn, Michigan; Cork, Ireland; and Dagenham, England. The gray and red, 20-horsepower, kerosene-burning Fordson was a pioneer among mass-produced tractors and helped revolutionize farming.

The gray, 23-horsepower Ford 9N, brought out in 1939, employed the Ferguson System with implements attached directly to the tractor by means of a three-point hitch.

The slightly modified 2N was introduced in 1942, and was followed in 1947 by the 26-horsepower 8N, returning to the original gray and red Ford color scheme.

Ford later built the Model NAA, beginning with a Golden Jubilee model in 1953; the Ford 600 series, introduced in 1955; and in 1964 came out with a worldwide line of farm tractors painted blue. The modern Ford farm tractor line has been expanded to 21 models from 13 to 335 horsepower

Nearly 5,000,000 Fordson and Ford tractors have been built since 1917.

American owners of antique Fordsons for years have been obtaining information on their tractors through Charles R. Hope Jr., Route 2, Box 1434, Purcellville, Va. A Fordson owners' club in England is headed by Arthur Batelle, editor of Fordson Magazine, Brookbank, Ambaston, Derby DE73EF.

Until now, Ford "N" series owners had no club or center for exchanging information. Todd Miles is attempting to remedy that.

Bughunters search for alfalfa weevil parasites

LANCASTER — Alfalfa fields in 11 eastern and midwestern states will be the sites this Spring of a massive bug-hunt--a systematic search for parasites of the destructive alfalfa weevil.

This is the opening shot in a joint biological control blitz against the pest by the U S. Department of Agriculture and several states

The alfalfa weevil damages alfalfa–the nation's leading hay crop–by feeding on its tips, leaves and buds, reducing yields and nutritive value. The pest, first found in the United States near Salt Lake City in 1904, has since spread throughout the country. It causes millions of dollars damage each year.

The parasite survey is part of an expanded state and federal biological control effort under direction of USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

The hunters–state and federal plant protection experts–will make surveys in Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kentucky, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin looking for any several species of parasites released in these states since 1957 to help control the pest Their objective is to learn if any of the parasites have become established.

The parasites are tiny, stingless wasps that lay their eggs in various life stages of the weevil. After hatching, larvae of the wasps devour the weevil, providing natural control

The parasites are already established in several eastern states, where they save farmers an estimated $7 million a year in pesticide and other control costs.

"We want to do more than just find the parasites," said Thomas Burger, Supervisor ot an APHIS laboratory at Niles, Mich., who is coordinating the survey "We also want to find enough of the parasites concentrated in areas of Pennsylvania, Indiana, Kentucky, Michigan, and New Jersey (not included in the detection survey) to establish collection sites from which we can distribute them to other areas where they are not yet established "

Sites for insectaries–field nurseries established to rear the parasites and release them in quantity where needed–will be selected in Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Missouri, Minnesota and Wisconsin

State dealer to face sentencing

WILLIAMSPORT — A Pennsylvania meat dealer pleaded guilty on March 7 in U.S District Court, Williamsport, to violating the Federal Meat Inspection Act

Eugene Nicholas, owner of Eugene Nicholas Livestock, R1 Logantown, sold and transported six uninspected calf carcasses, in March 1979, to a New York meat distributor

The Federal Meat Inspection Act, administered by the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Food Safety and Quality Service, requires that all meat products sold and transported across state lines be federally inspected to ensure they are wholesome, unadultered, and accurately labeled.

Sentencing will follow a pre-sentence conference

Delaware receives $15,000 to fight bean beetle

GEORGETOWN, Del. — Delaware has received a grant to participate this summer in a regional project using a parasitic insect to control Mexican bean beetles in soybeans.

The project will be funded by a $15,000 grant from the plant protection and quarantine department of the USDA Animal Health Inspection Service. It will be administrated in Delaware by the state Department of Agriculture.

Purpose of the project is to demonstrate the effectiveness of a small parasitic wasp, pedibius, for control of the beetles over a large geographic area. This parasite has already proven very effective in individual fields in Delaware when properly managed. Four states are participating in the project–Delaware, Maryland, New Jersey, and Virginia.

According to University of Delaware extension pest management specialist Mark Graustein, the demonstration area will cover a 400-square-mile block including the lower 10 miles of New Castle and upper 10 miles of Kent counties. He will train the field technicians used in the project. Department of Agriculture representatives are now in the process of locating growers willing to participate in the project.

Participation includes making available an eighth of an acre for a nurse crop of snap beans along the edge of soybean fields. This nurse plot will be used to attract high numbers of bean beetles when these emerge from overwintering sites in nearby woods and underbrush. When the second generation of MBB reaches the appropriate stage, the parasites will be released in the beetle-infested nurse plots.

The demonstration area has been divided so that there will be one nurse plot every four square miles, or a total of 100 plots. The idea is to achieve beetle control over the entire area. This compares with the trap crop system now in use on some Delaware farms, where parasites are used only to protect individual soybean fields.

The Delaware Extension Service, because of its previous experience with such parasite programs, has agreed to provide the training for the technicians employed by the Department of Agriculture.

These technicians will monitor MBB activity, release the parasites, and evaluate the results of the project over the entire target area. They will be supervised by the state plant pathologist and entomologist.

If the project is successful, it may in time provide the impetus for a state-supported Mexican bean beetle parasite release program in Delaware.

Crop insurance program expands, changes several features

HARRISBURG — Three new counties have been added to the Crop Insurance program in Pennsylvania. Several different rates of coverage also are available.

In addition, the entire Crop Insurance program may undergo some dramatic changes in the near future.

Farmers in Berks, Northumberland, and Crawford counties now are eligible for coverage of several spring planted crops.

Berks County is the only county in the state which will offer coverage for soybean growers in 1980. But that may soon change.

Johnnie Perdue, district director for the 11 southeastern Pennsylvania counties covered by the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, said Tuesday the FCIC plans to insure any crop in any county where 1000 or more acres of the crop are grown for commercial use.

The target date for full implementation of the program is 1985.

Another change will be contracting with private industry to do the insurance sales. Perdue said FCIC feels private firms have the sales expertise to so a better job of getting policies for farmers.

The paperwork will be administered by ASCS.

The move to assure insurance for any major crop produced in any county is part of a government move to do away with the 29 disaster programs currently offered at various times to farmers.

"It's a move to insurance rather than a give-away," Perdue said.

Variable coverages also will be offered to farmers.

A farmer can insure his crop for 50 percent, 65 percent, or 75 percent of its expected total value.

While allowing reduced premiums, the percentage coverages also provide coverage for only a portion of the crop.

FCIC said it figures about one out of every 12 acres planted in the United States never reaches harvest. It may be lost to weather, insects, disease, or other disaster.

The insurance is available only to owners of the insured crops who may be individuals, partnerships, corporations, or other legal entities.

A tenant and landlord may apply for insurance individually.

Producers are given insurance contracts. But a producer does not have to reapply each year. The insurance on each crop remains in force until canceled in writing either by the farmer or FCIC

Both quality and quantity losses can be insured under the program.

Perdue said there are a number of advantages to the USDA-sponsored insurance programs beyond keeping a farmer from being wiped out.

For instance, having an insurance policy increases the farmers collateral value since he then can show his banker that he will indeed get some return from the seed money he borrows.

Even if not in the form of sales of crops, the farmer can expect an indemnity payment on his crops.

Because it is expanding its programs, FCIC anticipates having some sort of program available in almost every farm county in the country.

To allow administration to keep up with the expanded scope of the crop insurance program, a new regional office has been opened in Harrisburg.

The office is at Suite 320, 75 S. Houcks Road, Harrisburg, 17109. Phone number is 717/782-4803.

The office is located near the Dauphin County Ag Extension offices.—CH

Leon Riegel Tim Trayer Edgar Sheaffer

A reader writes:

A few neighbors have had coccidiosis in their small goat and sheep herds. At the present, I have about 50 bred ewes and have not had trouble with the disease to date. But, if at all possible, I would like to be on the safe side.

Is there any vaccination for coccidiosis that I could safely use? Is this disease more of a problem in young animals than adults? Any other information on this would be most helpful. Thank you.

Charlotte Lippincott
Woodstown, N.J.

Dr. Sheaffer comments:

Coccidiosis in sheep and goats is an infectious disease of the intestinal tract caused by a protozoan parasite.

As a matter of fact, there are six species of this protozoan that may be pathogenic for sheep and goats. This culprit is a member of the genus, or family, that goes by the name Eimeria.

Unfortunately, this disease is more severe in young, growing stock. Adults are less subject to the disease.

As I describe the disease symptoms and treatments, keep in mind that what I say for sheep applies equally to goats.

A sheep owner usually becomes suspicious that something is wrong when the hind-quarters of the lambs are soiled with manure. Further observation will reveal these lambs are depressed and are losing weight. Signs of active coccidiosis include diarrhea, intestinal hemorrhage, along with the weight loss.

Coccidosis should not be confused with entertoxemia type D, pulpy kidney disease, which has a higher mortality and affects the animals at a faster rate. your veterinarian will be able to help you to differentiate between the two diseases.

One major difference between the two diseases is enterotoxemia can be prevented by vaccinating pregnant ewes three weeks before lambing, and then vaccinating the lambs at four weeks of age with clostridium perfringens type D toxoid. However, there is currently no available vaccine for coccidiosis.

Lambs with a mild case of coccidiosis may have diarrhea and loss of appetite for only two or three days. Some of them will recover spontaneously without treatment.

Other lambs will have a severe infection with much straining and a dark, profuse, watery or bloody diarrhea Severe infections require prompt treatment Mortality in the severe group is commonly ten percent or more depending on timely treatment.

If the disease has broken out in your lambs, consult your veterinarian for the recommended therapy

The following list of medications have been reported to be effective in treating the disease: sulfaguanidine, sulfamerazine, sulfaqunoxaline, amprolium, and arsanilic acid.

Management plays a large role in the control of coccidiosis. Transmission of the disease is primarily by the contamination of lambs' creep feed with manure. Creep feeders should be designed so that they can be easily cleaned and disinfected, and readily moved from one lot or pasture to another.

Adult sheep often spread the infection in their manure droppings without showing any apparent signs of having the disease. If the lambs' feed is contaminated with this manure and the eggs of protozoan parasites it contains, the lambs are likely to contract coccidiosis.

I can't stress enough the importance of rotating pastures and feed lots. In addition, the creep feed for your lamb crop should be of adequate quality to supply the needed energy, protein, vitamins (especially vitamin A), minerals and salt.

And if treatment becomes necessary, I have found coccidiosis has been successfully controlled in feedlot lambs by feeding one gram of sulfaguanidine per pound of creep. This medicated feeding program should be started at weaning and may be continued for approximately four weeks.

If you have a question you would like answered by the team from Valley Animal Hospital, send it to Ask the VMD, Box 366, Lititz, PA 17543. Questions will be kept anonymous on request.
